

UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE: AN AGENCY IN CRISIS

COMMITTEE REPORT
CHAIRMAN JASON E. CHAFFETZ &
RANKING MEMBER ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS
COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND GOVERNMENT REFORM
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
114TH CONGRESS
DECEMBER 9, 2015

Executive Summary

The United States Secret Service (USSS) is tasked with a zero-failure mission: to protect the President and other protectees at all costs. For most of its existence, USSS has strived to complete that mission while simultaneously garnering the respect and admiration of the American people. Secret Service agents and officers earned a reputation as stoic and impervious guardians of our government's most important leaders. The American public's respect for the agency diminished following the April 2012 prostitution scandal in Cartagena, Colombia, which attracted significant media attention and exposed systemic problems within the agency.

Since then, several incidents have made it abundantly clear that USSS is in crisis. The agency's weaknesses have been exposed by a series of security failures at the White House, during presidential visits, and at the residences of other officials, including Vice President Biden and former presidents of the United States. The Committee's investigation found that problems that undermine USSS's protective mission predate and postdate the misconduct in Cartagena. The Committee also found that at times agency leaders have provided incomplete and inaccurate information to Congress.

This report examines four incidents in detail: a November 11, 2011, incident where an individual fired several shots at the White House from a semiautomatic rifle; the April 2012 misconduct in Cartagena, Colombia; a September 16, 2014, incident at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, Georgia, where an armed contract security guard with a violent arrest history rode in an elevator with President Obama and later breached the President's security formation; and a March 4, 2015, incident where two intoxicated senior USSS officials—including a top official on the President's protective detail—interfered with a crime scene involving a bomb threat just outside the White House grounds.

The Committee also found that one year after the blue-ribbon Protective Mission Panel issued its assessment and recommendations for the security of the White House compound, several serious deficiencies remain. As USSS's mission has grown, its workforce has had to do more with less. USSS is experiencing a staffing crisis that poses perhaps the greatest threat to the agency. The crisis began after 2011 when the number of employees began to decline sharply, and the decline continued across all categories of employment. Three main causes are significant cuts imposed by the Budget Control Act of 2011, systemic mismanagement at USSS that has been unable to correct these shortfalls, and declining employee morale leading to attrition.

From budget-related hiring freezes to increasing attrition over the past five years, the personnel shortage is so high that—notwithstanding the blue-ribbon Protective Mission Panel's recommendations that USSS increase hiring significantly—there has been a net decline in operational personnel, including the Uniformed Division that guards the White House. The high attrition rate means that the personnel who remain are significantly overworked, and morale is at an all-time low. Rather than swiftly bringing on new employees, USSS has an extraordinarily inefficient hiring process which overburdens USSS with low-quality applicants. Further, recent changes to the process have allegedly fostered risks in connection with the approval of security clearances.

Internal USSS data shows that morale is further harmed because many employees do not have confidence in agency leadership. Some whistleblowers told the Committee they believed this was due to a culture where leaders are not held accountable.

Many agency personnel who spoke to the Committee are desperate for new outside leadership willing to undertake dramatic reforms at the agency. The Committee found that reforms should include a reconsideration of USSS's responsibilities, which have dramatically expanded in recent decades. No peripheral investigative duties should be allowed to detract from the core aspect of USSS's mission: protection.

I. Introduction

The United States Secret Service (USSS) is tasked with a zero-failure mission: to protect the President at all costs. This imperative has long attracted idealistic individuals to USSS in service to their country. Because this function is so critical, Congress has a special responsibility to provide the serious dedication, support, and oversight that USSS deserves and requires.

Problematically, security failures and staffing shortfalls that have been repeatedly identified continue to emerge in recent incidents. For example, a September 1994 plane crash on the South Lawn spurred a comprehensive White House Security review raising key concerns and recommendations that are still applicable today.¹ Severe budget cuts beginning in 2011 exacerbated the agency's difficulties and have led to the lowest staffing levels at USSS in ten years.² Prior to April 2012, USSS received little meaningful oversight from Congress other than annual appropriations and hearings where USSS updated Congress on crime trends.³ That changed abruptly in April 2012 after the agency's prostitution scandal in Cartagena, Colombia, which drew public attention and exposed potential systemic problems within the agency.

Since that time, several incidents have made it clear that USSS is in crisis. These "horrific events," as referred to by former Director Ralph Basham, have exposed several problems with USSS.⁴ On December 10, 2013, a fake sign language interpreter with a violent past⁵ and criminal history⁶ stood within feet of President Obama at the memorial service for Nelson Mandela in South Africa.⁷ Shortly thereafter, that fake interpreter was admitted to a psychiatric hospital.⁸ On May 6, 2014, an unauthorized vehicle entered the secure perimeter of the White House by following Malia Obama's motorcade through lowered bollards.⁹ On September 16, 2014, an armed contract security guard with an arrest for reckless conduct with a gun rode in an elevator with President Obama at a visit to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).¹⁰ The Committee would later learn that this breach was the result of USSS's failure to properly take into account documentation from CDC indicating that all contract guards would be armed, properly conduct a name check on the elevator operator, or prevent the President from entering an elevator with an individual without credentials. Just three days later, on September 19, 2014, an armed individual jumped the White House fence, outran USSS officers, and entered the White House, making it all the way to the East Room.¹¹ In both of the last two cases, USSS initially provided incorrect information to the public.¹² On September 27, 2014, a man posing as a Member of Congress at a Congressional Black Caucus awards dinner where the President was speaking breached a secure area backstage.¹³ Committee staff learned that the man even managed to speak with the President backstage, a detail previously unknown to the public.¹⁴ Committee staff also learned that just six days later, on October 3, 2014—the same day that news of the awards dinner breach was made public—a woman gained unauthorized entrance backstage at the same venue, this time the site of a Congressional Hispanic Caucus Gala.¹⁵ Both of these incidents are eerily reminiscent of a November 2009 incident where three individuals were able to crash a White House state dinner, getting past layers of security without an invitation.¹⁶ On October 9, 2014, just six days after the incident at the Congressional Hispanic Caucus gala, a hotel employee in Los Angeles was not properly screened through a magnetometer and did not have his bag searched at a time when the President and Senior Advisor Valerie Jarrett were staying at the hotel. Moreover, one special agent was observed watching movies on post with a Los Angeles Police Department officer.¹⁷ These last six breaches all took place within a one-month time period.

The security failures over the past few years have not been limited to the White House and presidential visits. USSS also allowed the security system at one former President's residence to remain inoperable from September 2013 until the end of 2014.¹⁸ As a result, in the spring of 2014 a Czech citizen with an expired visa entered the property and remained undetected for nearly an hour.¹⁹ In November 2014, security equipment at a different residence showed signs of impending failure.²⁰ USSS officials further acknowledged that other serious problems exist at the residences of two other protectees.²¹ On January 17, 2015, multiple gunshots were fired outside of Vice President Joseph Biden’s Delaware residence, yet USSS had no surveillance cameras facing the main road in front of the home.²² Although USSS informed the Committee that no prior security incidents had occurred at the Biden residence,²³ in fact, security systems had been breached as early as April 2013 when four young adults went fishing in the Bidens’ backyard—an undetected intrusion only brought to the attention of USSS after a neighbor saw the young adults and called to inform the agency.²⁴

Additional failures have plagued the agency in 2015. On January 26, 2015, a drone crashed onto the White House lawn, prompting news reports that the White House radar system failed to pick up the object.²⁵ On February 14, 2015, two individuals gained unauthorized entry to the outer security perimeter of the White House complex simply by walking in unnoticed.²⁶ On March 4, 2015, the senior-most USSS official responsible for day-to-day protective operations at the White House was in a vehicle that moved a protective barrier and came within inches of a possible bomb outside of a White House guard booth. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Office of Inspector General (OIG) concluded the official’s judgment was likely impaired by alcohol.²⁷

Through this Committee’s work, it has become clear that problems threatening USSS’s protective mission long predate the misconduct in Cartagena. For example, in the summer of 2011 agents from a Prowler team protective unit, which usually patrols the area near the White House, were diverted for a considerable period of time for personal welfare checks on an assistant to the Director of the agency, unrelated to the assistant's official duties.²⁸ On several of those days the President was in residence at the White House.²⁹ DHS OIG found that the protective unit would not have been able to respond to emergencies at the White House while the Prowler unit was at least 50 minutes away in rural Maryland.³⁰ In November 2011, gunshots were fired at the White House while Sasha Obama was in the residence and Malia Obama was expected to return at any moment. USSS did not discover that the shots hit the White House residence until four days later, when a housekeeper noticed broken glass and chunks of cement on the floor.³¹ USSS did not confirm either of these incidents until late 2014, shortly after they were brought to public attention by press reports.³²

USSS must keep constant vigilance over secured facilities and protectees. USSS provided the Committee with data regarding attempted or actual security breaches involving protectees and secured facilities over the past ten years.³³ While this data only captured known incidents that resulted in arrests, it is apparent that security incidents occur frequently enough that the agency must be prepared to deter and respond to breaches at all times.

Inextricably related to these events are USSS employees' views of their agency's ability to complete its mission. According to a recent federal government survey, only 63.2 percent of USSS respondents in 2015 believe that the agency is "successful at accomplishing its mission," down 15.4 percent from 2014 and 20.2 percent from 2013.³⁴

USSS must also ensure that there is accountability for security breaches as well as incidents of misconduct. As discussed in the following case studies, these post-incident investigations sometimes failed to quickly ascertain the full extent of the underlying problems. It may be necessary for USSS to address processes and procedures for investigating incidents.

The blue-ribbon Protective Mission Panel (Panel), convened by DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson, issued a report in December 2014 which made the point that accountability and performance are linked:

[T]he next director will need to help strengthen a culture of accountability. . . . The agency’s zero-failure mission requires that its high standards be met. In order for the Service’s agents and officers to meet its high standards, they must see that the organization itself believes in its standards and enforces them in a consistent, evenhanded manner. In other words, agency leadership, managers, and front line supervisors must believe and show that they are accountable for their mission. These are not just morale issues, or issues of fairness or trust. Accountability creates the culture of performance that the Secret Service needs to meet its zero-failure mission.³⁵

Unfortunately, USSS has severely struggled in this area in recent years. When asked about accountability for misconduct at USSS at a recent hearing, DHS Inspector General John Roth testified, “[G]iven the nature of what it is that we’ve seen since [2013], I believe that there is a serious problem within the Secret Service.”³⁶

USSS made some positive changes in 2015 in response to recommendations from the Panel and congressional oversight. The Committee found that one year after the Panel released its report, however, several serious concerns remain. Many USSS employees told Committee staff that USSS has not implemented a “culture of accountability,” as recommended by the Panel. Instead, they say USSS leadership refuses to recognize the unpleasant reality that the agency must undergo a dramatic reform.

The perception remains among some rank-and-file that agency leadership has protected as much as possible the “8th floor” (the location of senior management at USSS headquarters) or the “good old boys network.” Some whistleblowers have said disparate treatment harms morale and widens a gap already felt between employees and management. For example, the typical process for evaluating whether security clearances should be suspended was not followed for the two senior supervisors directly involved in the March 4, 2015, incident. Although it is difficult to measure morale, it is clear USSS is currently experiencing a staffing crisis that includes a higher attrition rate among special agents in 2015 than USSS has experienced in at least ten years.

The challenges to retaining experienced personnel pose major problems for USSS because the agency cannot simply replace departing employees with others who have similar experience and skills. Instead, the agency appears to hire new or entry-level officers to augment their current force. Additionally, there are indications that the haste to hire new employees is having a detrimental impact on the security clearance process. In June 2015, USSS publicly confirmed whistleblower reports that the agency allowed both special agents and Uniformed

Division officers—including those at the White House—to begin work without being issued a security clearance, a requirement for employment with USSS.³⁷ A USSS subject matter expert and former security officer of over ten years alleges that USSS leadership pressured security personnel to cut corners in the clearance process and that this incident was but one of many problems that resulted. DHS OIG is currently investigating these allegations.³⁸

DHS OIG also faced certain allegations during a crucial time for USSS oversight, which led to further investigations that complicated the issues surrounding USSS. First, allegations were raised that the DHS OIG investigation of the Cartagena scandal, which was completed in September 2012 but never released publicly, was delayed and omitted derogatory information. Second, the January 2013 DHS OIG inspection report on the adequacy of USSS’s internal investigation found that USSS responded “expeditiously and thoroughly,” but omitted some information regarding how USSS advised employees of their rights prior to interviews and the resulting harm to the investigation.³⁹ Third, DHS OIG issued a report on USSS misconduct in December 2013—eighteen months after the Cartagena incident—which “did not find evidence that misconduct is widespread in USSS.”⁴⁰

Former Acting and Deputy Inspector General Charles Edwards resigned from his position on December 16, 2013, just three days prior to his testimony before the U.S. Senate about allegations related to his lack of independence.⁴¹ In April 2014, a U.S. Senate subcommittee released a report finding that Edwards had “jeopardized the independence” of DHS OIG through certain behaviors, but the Senate Report did not substantiate allegations regarding the integrity of various reports, including those pertaining to USSS.⁴² In November 2014, the Department of Transportation OIG, conducting an investigation on behalf of the Council of the Inspectors General on Integrity and Efficiency, also substantiated four allegations of misconduct against Edwards, but did not substantiate claims that these incidents affected the reporting of USSS investigations.⁴³

The Committee, in a bipartisan fashion, has gathered an immense amount of information officially from USSS and some information from whistleblowers. USSS, however, has been disappointingly resistant to the Committee’s oversight efforts, particularly with regard to document productions. Perhaps this is not surprising because USSS has received only marginal congressional oversight throughout its history. The agency has been noted for its insularity and resistance to change in general. As the Panel noted: “Following through on reforms and recommendations has been an issue for the Service in the past.”⁴⁴

Indeed, USSS itself has previously identified numerous reforms and commitments that had been articulated but never fully implemented.⁴⁵ Although the Panel made clear that some of its recommendations “precisely echo recommendations that the White House Security Review made in 1995 but that remain concerns today,”⁴⁶ it was disconcerting for Committee staff to read the Top Secret 1995 report and see how many of the same issues still plague USSS. It is clear that USSS has not successfully addressed long-standing areas of concern. Such an inability to fix known problems is very dangerous for USSS—and for those whom the agency is charged with protecting.

USSS has historically been and remains filled with dedicated public servants firmly committed to USSS’s mission. It was once considered the premier federal law enforcement agency, both in training and attracting elite agents and officers. A better understanding of the agency’s missteps in the past will inform discussions about how to restore the agency to prominence.

Toward that end, the Committee reviewed thousands of pages of documents and interviewed dozens of current and former USSS employees, many of whom came to the Committee as whistleblowers. The Committee also relied on facts and information obtained during hearings and in private briefings from agency officials. The Committee’s bipartisan investigation yielded numerous findings and recommendations, which are contained herein. This report also contains case studies of four of the most high-profile incidents of the last several years—the November 2011 White House shooting, the spring 2012 incident in Cartagena, the September 2014 Centers for Disease Control and Prevention incident in Atlanta, and the March 2015 incident at the White House—followed by sections on accountability for misconduct, budget, management and leadership, running the agency, and reconsideration of mission.

II. Findings and Recommendations

Findings Related to the November 11, 2011 White House Shooting

On November 11, 2011, Oscar Ramiro Ortega-Hernandez fired multiple shots at the White House from a semiautomatic rifle. USSS was not aware that at least seven bullets hit the residence for several days.

FINDING: Arlington Police questioned Ortega-Hernandez the day after the shooting and let him go due to lack of awareness of the ongoing investigation.

FINDING: USSS failed to identify the threat to the White House despite indications that shots had been fired at the White House.

FINDING: USSS failed to create a Spot Report until damage to the White House was discovered.

Findings Related to April 2012 Misconduct in Cartagena

In April 2012, several USSS agents and officers solicited prostitutes before a presidential visit to the Summit of Americas in Cartagena, Colombia.

FINDING: USSS personnel who engaged in sexual misconduct in Cartagena had engaged in similar misconduct on past occasions.

FINDING: Then-Director Mark Sullivan at times provided inaccurate or incomplete information to Congress.

FINDING: Standards for sexual behavior as they pertain to maintaining security clearances may not have been applied consistently.

Findings Related to the September 16, 2014 Incident at the CDC

The Secret Service allowed an unvetted armed contract security guard to ride in an elevator with President Obama at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in Atlanta, Georgia. The guard also breached the President's security formation and attempted to take pictures of the President at a departure tent.

FINDING: The President's security was breached at least three times at the CDC.

FINDING: USSS failed to conduct background checks on CDC's security guards, all of whom were armed.

FINDING: USSS allowed unvetted armed guards near the President.

FINDING:	USSS improperly distributed pins to CDC security staff without conducting appropriate checks.
FINDING:	USSS did not realize the armed guard who rode in an elevator with the President was previously arrested for reckless conduct with a gun.
FINDING:	USSS allowed the President to enter an elevator with an unpinned individual.
FINDING:	The armed guard also breached the President’s security at the departure tent.
FINDING:	USSS did not adhere to its own protective methodology while the President was at the CDC.
FINDING:	Video coverage of the President’s CDC site visit did not capture any of the breaches.
FINDING:	USSS initially blamed the CDC after an insufficient review of the incident.
FINDING:	USSS failed to inform White House staff during a briefing after the incident that the guard was armed.
FINDING:	Then-Director Julia Pierson did not inform the President his security had been breached until two weeks later, after the incident was made public.
FINDING:	USSS conducted a more thorough review of the incident after media attention.
FINDING:	USSS provided incomplete information to Congress.
FINDING:	An individual with an arrest history that includes reckless conduct with a gun may not be disqualified from serving in a security function during a Presidential visit.

Findings Related to the March 4, 2015 Incident near the White House

On March 4, 2015, USSS senior supervisors Marc Connolly and George Ogilvie interfered with a crime scene involving a bomb threat just outside White House grounds. Connolly and Ogilvie were intoxicated at the time.

FINDING:	A warrant was not issued for the suspect in a timely manner.
FINDING:	USSS supervisors did not know the process for referring misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility.
FINDING:	USSS senior supervisors believed fellow senior supervisors would self-report their own misconduct.

- FINDING: The typical process for evaluating whether security clearances should be suspended was not followed for the two senior supervisors directly involved in the March 4, 2015, incident.
- FINDING: Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson may not have been candid with Committee staff.
- FINDING: USSS initially did not discipline Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson after the Inspector General found he did not report the incident.
- FINDING: DHS OIG did not investigate whether other USSS employees violated the “10-hour rule” that prohibits consuming alcohol and reporting for duty.

Findings Related to USSS Culture and Accountability

- FINDING: USSS utilized non-disclosure agreements that do not comply with whistleblower protections.
- FINDING: The independence of DHS’s Security Appeals Board may be called into question when adjudicating USSS clearance revocation decisions because the Board is composed of three members from USSS.
- RECOMMENDATION: DHS should promptly ensure the Security Appeals Board consists of employees from multiple different agencies.*
- FINDING: USSS managers and supervisors do not always report misconduct.
- RECOMMENDATION: USSS must develop alternatives to self-reporting and hold managers and supervisors accountable in cases where they fail to report misconduct promptly.*
- FINDING: At times USSS supervisors lacked clarity about when to report possible misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility.
- RECOMMENDATION: Supervisors should receive formal training on the new guidelines for promptly referring allegations of possible misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility.*
- FINDING: At times USSS managers have failed to follow DHS procedures for referring certain types of misconduct to the inspector general.
- RECOMMENDATION: USSS Office of Inspection should refer misconduct covered by the MOU to DHS OIG immediately upon receiving adequate information to reasonably conclude that misconduct may have occurred.*

FINDING: USSS leadership has at times failed to charge USSS personnel with “providing inaccurate information” or “lack of candor.”

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should clearly define what constitutes “providing inaccurate information” or “lack of candor” and agency personnel should always be independently charged when merited.

FINDING: Some USSS employees have resigned or retired prior to being disciplined for misconduct.

RECOMMENDATION: Once the fact-finding phase of an investigation is completed, USSS should continue to move swiftly through the disciplinary process.

FINDING: At times USSS managers have failed to terminate employees promptly when serious misconduct has been substantiated.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should review its disciplinary processes to find ways to streamline and make them more efficient and effective.

Findings Related to Agency Management and Leadership

FINDING: USSS leadership needs to continue to reform the agency.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should make additional positive changes in senior management ensure they uphold standards of excellence.

FINDING: Top leadership from outside USSS will help the agency make necessary changes.

RECOMMENDATION: The next president should take into account the Panel’s recommendation for outside leadership when selecting a USSS director.

FINDING: After USSS’s public announcement that then-Deputy Director A.T. Smith had accepted a position with another agency, he remained on USSS’s payroll as a detailee until his retirement nine months later.

FINDING: Some USSS rank-and-file do not have confidence in USSS leadership.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should proactively seek and cultivate highly talented individuals with fresh perspectives for the next generation of senior leadership.

Findings Related to the Agency’s Staffing

FINDING: USSS is experiencing a staffing crisis that threatens to jeopardize its critical mission.

RECOMMENDATION: Congress should ensure that USSS has sufficient funds to restore staffing to required levels, and USSS should ensure that it has systems in place to achieve these goals.

FINDING: USSS has fewer total personnel now than when the Protective Mission Panel recommended a hiring increase in December 2014.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should focus immediately on increasing its permanent APT personnel, especially those with a role in hiring, and should consider seeking temporary details from other agencies to expedite hiring.

Findings Related to the Agency's Budget

FINDING: USSS does not currently have a zero-based budget to accurately determine the costs of its mission.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should include workforce planning experts outside the agency in developing a zero-based budget, including a third party validation of methodology.

FINDING: USSS does not have adequate systems in place to manage its budget.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should implement systems to track spending and other basic accounting data.

FINDING: Congressional funding for USSS has been inconsistent over the past decade, including several years of cuts followed by more recent efforts to reverse this trend.

RECOMMENDATION: Congress should fully support the President's fiscal year 2016 request for USSS—particularly in light of the increased demand of the presidential election year—provided that there are adequate controls in place to ensure that the funds are used to address ongoing hiring challenges.

Findings Related to Agency Morale and Employee Attrition

FINDING: Morale at USSS is critically low and likely contributes to attrition.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should report to Congress on additional proposals to decrease attrition and improve morale.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should include potential incentive plans to keep experienced special agents who are eligible for retirement in a report to Congress.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should ensure that supervisors and managers of APT staff have the requisite knowledge, skills, and experience.

Findings Related to Agency Hiring

FINDING: In 2013, USSS discarded applications from 400-600 qualified applicants.

FINDING: USSS's current hiring process invests significant resources in applicants who may not be eligible to receive a security clearance.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should strongly consider incorporating interviews earlier in the application process to filter out low-quality candidates and those unlikely to receive a security clearance.

FINDING: USSS's current process for expediting the security clearance process may result in increased risks to national security.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should take care to minimize risks to national security throughout the hiring process.

FINDING: USSS's Security Clearance Division has been understaffed for years, despite warnings from external reviewers.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS must adequately staff the Security Clearance Division.

FINDING: Keeping USSS's Security Clearance Division under Human Resources may be counterproductive to maintaining security at the agency.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should consider moving the Security Clearance Division under the Chief Operating Officer and ensure that any employee occupying the Chief Security Officer position has the requisite experience.

FINDING: USSS practice for processing security clearances appears to result in the agency issuing security clearances three times faster than the pace recommended by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should allow at least as much time as the 114-day ODNI timeline for issuing security clearances.

FINDING: USSS may have afforded special agents as little as three to ten days to conduct security clearance background investigations.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should provide sufficient time for special agents to conduct clearance background investigations.

FINDING: USSS re-hiring of former employees without requiring them to undergo an updated physical examination, polygraph, or background investigation poses security risks.

RECOMMENDATION: Re-hired employees at USSS should receive an updated physical examination, polygraph, and background investigation.

FINDING: USSS's hiring panel does not appear to always have access to the results of FBI background checks.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should not present applicants to the hiring panel until FBI background checks have been completed.

FINDING: Since adopting the new hiring system in 2013, USSS may hire less qualified applicants.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS's Security Clearance Division should participate in all hiring decisions to ensure the importance of national security.

FINDING: At times, USSS has allowed agents, officers, and APT staff to begin their service without having a fully processed security clearance.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should ensure that all security concerns and administrative checks are settled before an employee is put on duty.

Findings Related to Security Breaches

FINDING: Over the last 10 years, there have been 143 security breaches and attempted security breaches at secured facilities which resulted in an arrest, 13 of which resulted in jail time.

Findings Related to Reconsidering the Agency's Mission

FINDING: USSS's mission has dramatically expanded.

RECOMMENDATION: The Executive Branch should conduct an interagency review on USSS's collateral or non-essential missions that can be shed, and submit a report to Congress on its findings within a year.

III. Case Studies

1. November 11, 2011 White House Shooting

On the night of Friday, November 11, 2011, Oscar Ramiro Ortega-Hernandez fired several shots from a semiautomatic rifle at the White House. At least seven bullets struck the second floor of the White House, the location of the Obama family's personal residence.⁴⁷ Several officers on the scene reacted to the shots and discovered evidence of the shooting, such as the smell of gunpowder, falling debris, and the line-like pattern of leaves separated by a firearm. Some took cover and drew their weapons. However, believing the noise was the backfire from a nearby construction vehicle, a supervisor called over his radio, "No shots have been fired. . . . Stand down."⁴⁸ Although two witnesses saw Ortega-Hernandez fire the shots at the White House, USSS failed to treat the incident as a threat to the First Family until four days later, when White House ushers discovered broken glass and a chunk of cement in the residence.⁴⁹

USSS's response to the incident didn't become public until nearly three years later when a September 27, 2014 story in the Washington Post exposed many security failures.⁵⁰ USSS answered questions about the incident from numerous Members of Congress at a September 30, 2014 Committee hearing. The Committee also received two versions of USSS's incident after-action "Spot Report," which is a document that summarizes USSS's investigation into Ortega-Hernandez; one was updated on September 11, 2014.

A. Failure to Issue Lookout

FINDING: Arlington Police questioned Ortega-Hernandez the day after the shooting and let him go due to lack of awareness of the ongoing investigation.

USSS's Uniformed Division (UD) provides protection for the White House and its grounds. At approximately 8:52 p.m. EST on Friday, November 11, 2011, UD officers reported hearing gunshots in the area of 16th Street and Constitution Avenue NW.⁵¹ Within five minutes, USSS and U.S. Park Police located a suspect vehicle sitting unoccupied at 23rd Street and Constitution Avenue.⁵² The abandoned vehicle appeared to have been involved in an accident.⁵³

Officers found a loaded assault rifle on the front passenger seat;⁵⁴ a subsequent search of the vehicle identified six spent shell casings.⁵⁵

At 9:02 p.m., a UD officer notified the Arlington County Police Department (“Arlington PD”) that a suspect in dark clothing had been reported fleeing toward the Roosevelt Bridge, which would have taken him into Arlington, Virginia.⁵⁶ Subsequently, USSS, U.S. Park Police, Metropolitan Police, and Arlington PD all assisted with canvassing the area, but did not locate the suspect.⁵⁷

Meanwhile, at 9:18 p.m., the abandoned vehicle with the assault rifle was determined to have been registered to two individuals—one of them Ortega-Hernandez.⁵⁸ However, USSS did not issue a formal law enforcement lookout for Ortega-Hernandez.⁵⁹ Such a lookout (also sometimes called a “BOLO” for “be on look-out”) is a formal notification to law enforcement agencies to watch for a wanted suspect.

The next day, on Saturday, November 12, Arlington PD responded to a call about a man behaving suspiciously in Quincy Park. The man was Ortega-Hernandez.⁶⁰ This was the second time in two days that Arlington PD had been contacted about Ortega-Hernandez; he had been caught peeping in residential windows the morning of November 11.⁶¹ However, after the contact with Ortega-Hernandez on November 12, Arlington PD allowed him to leave. Since USSS had not issued a lookout on Ortega-Hernandez, Arlington PD apparently was unaware he was connected with the White House shooting and let him go.⁶²

- USSS/WFO SA B. Conley revealed Ortega-Hernandez had contact with the Arlington County Police Department (ACPD) on the morning of 11/11/11 peeping in residential windows and 11/12/11 after engaging in suspicious behavior in Quincy Park, [REDACTED]. A field interview was conducted and a photo was taken after which Ortega-Hernandez was sent on his way. This contact with ACPD occurred before any lookouts were in circulation.

USSS did not learn of Ortega-Hernandez’s encounters with Arlington PD until the next day, Sunday, November 13, apparently after U.S. Park Police obtained a warrant for the arrest of Ortega-Hernandez on the felony charge of carrying a deadly weapon within the District of Columbia.⁶³

Subsequently, USSS conducted interviews of Ortega-Hernandez's parents, girlfriend, and friends. From those interviews they learned that approximately one year ago Ortega-Hernandez said that he wanted to kill President Obama and had referred to him as the devil, that Ortega-Hernandez "believes he is Jesus and grew his hair out to resemble him," and that Ortega-Hernandez purchased a "weapon for protection in the event of 'Armageddon' or a revolution."⁶⁴ USSS agents also reviewed videos of Ortega-Hernandez in which he commented "Osama bin Ladin [sic] was the only man with courage enough to stand up to the U.S."⁶⁵

On November 16, Ortega-Hernandez returned to a hotel where he had stayed prior to the incident. As a result of USSS issuing a lookout sheet to the hotel, an attentive hotel clerk noticed Ortega-Hernandez returning to the hotel and contacted USSS. At the request of USSS, Pennsylvania state police then arrested Ortega-Hernandez.⁶⁶ In April 2014, Ortega was sentenced to 25 years in federal prison and 5 years of supervised probation upon release.⁶⁷

B. Identifying the Threat to White House

FINDING: USSS failed to identify the threat to the White House despite indications that shots had been fired at the White House.

According to the Washington Post, several UD officers had indications shots had been fired at the White House. Two officers about 15 yards away from the shooter "could smell acrid gunpowder as they jumped out of their vehicle."⁶⁸ Another noticed that "leaves had been blown away in a line-like pattern, perhaps by air from a firearm muzzle" which "created a path of exposed grass pointing from Constitution Avenue north towards the White House."⁶⁹

Perhaps the clearest evidence a shooting had taken place involved one officer hearing debris fall from the Truman Balcony at the time of the shooting:

Under the Truman Balcony, the second-floor terrace off the residence that overlooks the Washington Monument, Secret Service Officer Carrie Johnson heard shots and what she thought was debris falling overhead. She drew her handgun and took cover, then heard a radio call reporting "possible shots fired" near the south grounds.⁷⁰

Officer Johnson "told several senior officers Friday night that she thought the house had been hit."⁷¹ Despite this evidence, officers received instructions from their supervisor to stand down.⁷² USSS's original Spot Report, dated November 15, 2011 did not note that any officers believed that someone had shot at the White House or that it had been hit and does not include any reference to a command to stand down.⁷³ The updated Spot Report, dated September 11, 2014, similarly does not include these details.⁷⁴

On the night of the November 11 shooting, Special Agent in Charge (SAIC) for Governmental and Public Affairs Ed Donovan contacted USSS's Protective Operations Intelligence Center and reported a series of tweets regarding the shooting:⁷⁵

Continuing on November 11, 2011

- USSS/GPA SAIC E. Donovan contacted the USSS Protective Operations Intelligence Center (PIOC) and reported an unknown subject with the username [REDACTED] posted the following statements on her Twitter account:

"Driver in front of my cab, STOPPED & fired 5 gun shots at the White House. @HuffingtonPost It took the police a while to respond" {sic}

"My cab was waiting at a stop light and this crazy guy stopped suddenly, fired at the white house and drove away like a maniac.@nytimes" {sic}

- The Investigative Support Division (ISD) was able to provide a telephone number and address for [REDACTED], as well as the additional statement on her Twitter account:

"Yes, I am here. They were shot in front of the Ellipse. Not directly at the White House. Sorry about that!" {sic}

Despite these pieces of information, USSS released the scene to U.S. Park Police at 9:52 p.m., approximately one hour after the shooting.⁷⁶

The next day, on Saturday, November 12, USSS conducted an interview with a witness in a cab west of the Constitution Avenue entrance to the White House complex at the time of the shooting. The witness said he or she observed someone fire five shots in the direction of the White House.⁷⁷ According to the original Spot Report, the witness "did not report seeing a second vehicle or suspect involved in the shooting."⁷⁸ This information is not included in revised Spot Report. Instead, notwithstanding this interview, the revised Spot Report notes that discussions between USSS and U.S. Park Police indicated that Park Police “believed the incident may have been an altercation between individuals in two separate vehicles.”⁷⁹

That afternoon, USSS supervisors related this version to UD officers, including Officer Johnson, at roll call. According to the Washington Post, Johnson “did not challenge her superiors, ‘for fear of being criticized’” at the roll call.⁸⁰ At a September 30, 2014 Committee hearing, Director Pierson stated that she would ask the Office of Professional Responsibility to re-interview Officer Johnson based on the information contained in the Washington Post article.⁸¹ The results of that interview are not included in the updated Spot Report.

C. Documenting the Incident

FINDING: USSS failed to create a Spot Report until damage to the White House was discovered.

Shortly after noon on November 15, 2011, a White House usher discovered a hole in the window of the Yellow Oval Room at the White House, as well as two other impacts on the window that did not break through the ballistic glass.⁸²

- 1238 hrs - USSS/PPD DSAIC P. Reid advised approximately 30 minutes prior an Executive Residence Usher reported:
 - a hole in the window of the Yellow Oval Room at the White House had been discovered;
 - two confirmed impacts of what appeared to be 7.62mm rounds struck the window but did not penetrate the ballistic glass.Further reference is made to the supplemental timeline regarding the discovery of the rounds at the White House Complex by USSS/PPD DSAIC P. Reid.

This fact was eventually documented in USSS’s Spot Report, but did not appear in the original November 15, 2011 USSS Spot Report.⁸³

Apparently, only after the damage to the White House was discovered did USSS inquire with the Department of Commerce, which is headquartered nearby, to see if any of their surveillance video showed the shooting.⁸⁴ It did not.⁸⁵

The fact that the original Spot Report was not created until four days after the shooting and that USSS did not inquire about surveillance footage of the shooting prior to that date lend support to allegations that USSS did not treat the incident as a threat to the First Family until the damage to the White House was discovered.⁸⁶

Further, USSS's Inspection Division did not evaluate the incident in 2011. In fact, the Inspection Division did not open a file on the case until October 20, 2014, nearly a month after the September 27 Washington Post story.⁸⁷

D. Summary

USSS's response to the shooting on November 11, 2011 exposed many security failures on the part of the agency—including the failure to determine the initial threat to the White House, the failure to apprehend Ortega-Hernandez in a timely manner, and the failure to promptly review USSS's own response. Had USSS examined the shooting and its response and learned from its mistakes, those lessons could have improved its responses to later incidents. This incident also highlights the potential dangers of a culture where USSS employees fear speaking up.

2. April 2012 Cartagena Misconduct

In April 2012 media reports revealed that USSS personnel solicited prostitutes before a Presidential visit to the Summit of Americas in Cartagena, Colombia. USSS immediately began an internal investigation into the alleged misconduct.⁸⁸ The investigation found that thirteen employees brought female foreign nationals (FFNs) back to their hotel rooms.⁸⁹ Accounts from the employees differ on whether they had sex or their respective FFN contact asked for payment.⁹⁰ Eleven employees had their Top Secret security clearances, and thus their access to USSS facilities and automated information systems, suspended on April 14, 2013; a twelfth on April 20, 2012; and the thirteenth on April 27, 2012.⁹¹ On May 7, 2012, the security clearances of three of the employees were reinstated.⁹² These three received Security Warning Letters, to be placed in their personnel files, and a Memorandum of Counseling.⁹³ Of the remaining ten, one senior agent retired, five resigned, three were removed from employment, and one had his appointment terminated during his trial period.⁹⁴

On May 18, 2012, then-USSS Director Mark Sullivan received a briefing on the USSS investigation-to-date by USSS investigators.⁹⁵ Five days later, on May 23, 2012, Sullivan testified before the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee (HSGAC).⁹⁶ At the hearing, Sullivan repeatedly assured Senators that the misconduct in Cartagena resulted from the poor judgment of a few agents, not from systemic problems afflicting the agency as a whole.⁹⁷ Sullivan testified that he was “confident this is not a cultural issue” and “not a systemic issue.”⁹⁸ He explained that USSS has “zero tolerance for this type of behavior,” and he did not “believe [those who engaged in misconduct] did it because they believed this type of behavior would be tolerated.”⁹⁹ Sullivan denied knowledge of other similar incidents of misconduct, aside from one 2008 incident in Washington, D.C. which resulted in the individual being separated from USSS.¹⁰⁰ Additionally, Sullivan claimed that individuals involved in the Cartagena misconduct had been asked if they previously engaged in similar misconduct and they had answered in the negative.¹⁰¹ Sullivan understood misconduct to include “casual sexual relationships” regardless of location.¹⁰²

Both the internal investigation by USSS and the independent investigation by DHS OIG yielded facts rendering certain parts of Sullivan’s testimony to HSGAC inaccurate. Some of this information should have been known to Sullivan prior to his testimony. At a minimum, USSS should have corrected Sullivan’s statements made to Congress upon learning the contradictory information. Based on the results of these investigations, the Committee further found that USSS did not administer consistent disciplinary action to those involved in the Cartagena misconduct.

A. Similar Misconduct in Past

FINDING: USSS personnel who engaged in sexual misconduct in Cartagena had engaged in similar misconduct on past occasions.

Shortly after the Cartagena misconduct, two employees involved admitted to USSS investigators their involvement in similar misconduct. One employee admitted to having sexual relationships with female foreign nationals (FFNs) in Italy, Ireland, Russia, New York City, and Colombia, and a sexual relationship with an American citizen in the Republic of Korea.¹⁰³ Another employee admitted involvement in a romantic relationship with a Colombian national in 2010.¹⁰⁴

Later, one senior employee who solicited a prostitute in Cartagena, but refused to answer USSS investigators' questions about a relationship with an FFN in El Salvador, admitted to OIG that he previously solicited prostitutes in El Salvador and Panama.¹⁰⁵

B. USSS Internal Investigation

FINDING: Then-Director Mark Sullivan at times provided inaccurate or incomplete information to Congress.

USSS knew of the misconduct of the first two employees identified above well before Sullivan received the May 18, 2012 briefing on USSS's investigation. At the May 23, 2012 hearing, however, Sullivan inaccurately claimed to Congress that individuals involved in the misconduct in Cartagena told USSS investigators that they had not previously engaged in similar misconduct.¹⁰⁶ Sullivan should have been made aware this claim was inaccurate based on information known to USSS before his briefing. After Sullivan's testimony, USSS's investigators continued to find evidence of misconduct. When USSS learned this information, it had a further obligation to update Congress that Sullivan's testimony had been inaccurate. No such correction was made.

At the hearing, Senator Susan M. Collins expressed concern that the employees who engaged in misconduct did so in such a conspicuous manner—by checking in their FFN guests to the hotel—that they may have believed their misconduct would be tolerated.¹⁰⁷ Sullivan assured Senator Collins that this incident was not indicative of a larger problem and that he “[did] not believe they did it because they believed this that type of behavior would be tolerated.”¹⁰⁸ He further testified that USSS has “zero tolerance for this type of behavior.”¹⁰⁹

Emails uncovered in USSS’s investigation, however, demonstrate the brazen conduct of those engaged in the misconduct. Notable examples include:

- On April 9, 2012, at 4:43 p.m., a senior agent forwarded an email to 54 USSS recipients regarding logistics for the trip to Cartagena, Colombia. In the body of the message, the senior agent wrote, “See logistics below. Our motto for this trip is una mas cerveza por favor.” [One more beer, please.]
- On April 10, 2012, at 9:13 a.m., a special agent sent an email to another special agent stating, “Swagg cologne-check/Pimp gear-check/Swagg sunglasses-check/Cash fo dem hoes-check.” Continuing in the same email thread, on April 10, 2012, at 9:19 a.m., the first special agent replied to the second special agent, “Plenty of magnums . . . double check!”
- On April 12, 2012, at 12:06 a.m., a special agent sent an email to a senior special agent with the subject line, “Re: Saludos de [name of supervisory agent].” In the body of the message, the special agent stated, “Pleyclb bosque [nightclub name] off hook.”
- On April 12, 2012, at 11:25 a.m., a special agent sent an email to another special agent stating, “I’m dying for the report from el noche pasado.” [I’m dying for the report from last night] “Tonight [sic] we ride.” The second special agent responded on April 12, 2012, at 12:19 p.m., stating, “Tengo un cuento increíble para ti.” [I have an incredible story for you.]
- On April 12, 2012, at 11:30 a.m., a Uniformed Division (UD) officer sent an email to another UD officer stating, “You should have seen what I did with my hotel room :)” Continuing on April 12, 2012, at 4:10 p.m., the UD officer returned the other UD officer’s email and stated, “I was only joking this morning, now that I have herd [sic] the news around here.”¹¹⁰

These emails not only provide circumstantial evidence of the actual misconduct, but demonstrate a complete disregard for the consequences of publicizing it. This indicates that the employees did not believe their misconduct would be punished. These emails were pulled on April 13, 2012 as part of USSS’s first report into the Cartagena misconduct, which covered the investigative period between April 13, 2012 and May 24, 2012.¹¹¹ Thus, the content of these emails were known at least to USSS investigators prior to Sullivan’s testimony.

It is particularly troublesome that a senior supervisor emailed fifty-four employees that his motto of the trip was “una mas cerveza por favor.”¹¹² Emails between those involved in the misconduct and individuals not involved indicate that employees did not hesitate to publicize their behavior. There is no evidence in the investigative record that those who became aware of the misconduct did anything to report or stop it.

Other facts further indicate the tolerance for misconduct at USSS. While still in Colombia, and after being interviewed about the misconduct, a senior agent felt it necessary to ask and receive permission from a more senior official to contact USSS employees and explicitly tell them not to bring guests back to the hotel.¹¹³ If USSS’s culture did not tolerate this behavior, then this email would not be necessary. In the weeks following the misconduct, USSS also issued a directive that made clear that laws of the U.S. apply to USSS employees abroad.¹¹⁴

The following measures relating to foreign car plane staffing are effective immediately.

1. Car planes will be staffed with two GS-15 supervisors – one from the Office of Professional Responsibility and one from the field.
2. The car plane supervisors will be responsible for briefing the standards of conduct expectations prior to departure to the destination country, as well as for enforcing these standards while in the foreign country.
3. All personnel traveling will have to have completed relevant LMS-based ethics training in order to be eligible for protective travel.
4. The Security Clearance Division will intensify country-specific briefings covering all pertinent topics prior to departure for the destination country.
5. Laws of the United States shall apply to Secret Service personnel while abroad.

Headquarters (Deputy Director) Smith

Sullivan provided inaccurate testimony about the security of equipment and documents at the May 23, 2012 hearing. He stated:

We also confirmed that none of the 12 individuals [who brought FFNs to the hotel] had any sensitive security documents, firearms, radios, or other security-related equipment in their hotel room.¹¹⁵

¹¹⁵ May 23, 2012 HSGAC hearing, supra note 96, at 7.

These comments echoed a May 1, 2012 letter from USSS to Representative Peter T. King, then Chairman of the House Committee on Homeland Security. Chairman King previously asked:

Did the USSS employees involved in this alleged incident possess any sensitive documents in their hotel room, particularly those related to the President's schedule in Colombia? If so, were those documents lost, stolen, or compromised in any fashion? If not, how was that determination made?¹¹⁶

USSS responded:

The investigation indicates that the USSS employees involved in this alleged incident did not have sensitive documents in their hotel room, as well as security-related equipment, such as guns.¹¹⁷

Prior to Sullivan's May 23, 2012 testimony, however, the USSS investigation found three of the twelve agents who brought FFNs back to their rooms reported having equipment, work-related documents, or credentials locked in safes in their rooms.¹¹⁸ The fact that the agents locked the items in safes indicates their sensitive nature.

USSS's investigation later found eight other USSS employees in Cartagena, none of whom were apparently involved in the misconduct, did not use appropriate measures to secure their sensitive paperwork, and/or equipment.¹¹⁹ These employees kept these items in personal bags or suitcase at times left unattended.¹²⁰ Six of those employees did not have locks for their bags or suitcases.¹²¹

Sullivan also gave incomplete and what turned out to be inaccurate information to Congress regarding derogatory intelligence information concerning one of the FFNs involved in the Cartagena incident. At the May 23, 2012 HSGAC hearing, Sullivan had the following exchange with Senator Collins:

COLLINS: Have you now been able to definitively conclude that the women were not associated with – that they were not foreign agents, that they did not work for drug cartels, that they were not involved in human trafficking, that they were not working for FARC, for example, or other terrorist groups?

SULLIVAN: One of the first things we did, Senator, was to get the names of all the women. We had their country identification number. We provided those names and identifiers to some of our various partners out there who could verify for us if there was any connection with any type of criminal activity or criminal organization, as well as any type of intelligence concerns that we may have. The – all of the information that we’ve received back is – has concluded that was no connection either from a counter – an intelligence perspective or a criminal perspective.¹²²

Similarly, USSS told Congressman King that “USSS requested that an [intelligence community] agency conduct name checks on the FFN’s” and those “name checks produced negative results for any known connection to foreign terrorist organizations, drug or human trafficking organizations.”¹²³

Contrary to the statements above, a records check during the USSS investigation did return a possible association for one of the FFNs.¹²⁴

Continuing on April 19, 2012, DAD ██████ received the results of the classified ██████ Program ██████ traces from SII, which revealed one possible association for one of the FFNs (retained in ISP under separate cover).

In a July 2012 interview, a supervisor who was on the ground in Cartagena told DHS OIG the following:¹²⁵

██████ stated that he did watch the testimony that Mark Sullivan, Director, USSS, provided to Congress regarding the incident in Colombia. ██████ remembered that Senator Susan Collins asked a leading question pertaining to the prostitutes having an association to terrorist and/or criminal organizations. ██████ recalls that Sullivan stated that none of the prostitutes had such ties. At the time of the testimony, ██████ did not know why Sullivan made that statement, when in fact, ██████ knew that one of the prostitutes had an intelligence query linked to a criminal organization.

DHS OIG would investigate the misstatement and confirm that USSS was aware that “the FFNs underwent a national security check in April 2012, which resulted in one match of the FFNs against a national security index,” but that it “consisted of a partial name match” and therefore believed it was “not a positive response.”¹²⁶ In November 2012, DHS OIG consulted with the Department of Justice (DOJ) Public Integrity Section regarding the namechecks and Sullivan’s misstatements to Congress.¹²⁷ DOJ then informed DHS OIG that “the findings did not merit prosecution.”¹²⁸

In a White Paper submitted to Congress, USSS stated the following regarding the derogatory information:¹²⁹

Record checks requested through another Federal Government agency developed classified, derogatory information possibly concerning one of the FFNs. This information consisted of an allegation that was over ten years old, and was loosely based on a similar name with virtually no other identifiers. The Federal Government agency that conducted the name checks could not substantiate the accuracy of the allegation itself, let alone that the allegation related to the same FFN that had contact with the Secret Service employee.

Regardless of the reliability of the allegation, Sullivan’s statement to Congress that there was “no connection either from . . . an intelligence perspective or a criminal perspective” did not provide the full range of information collected on the FFNs.

C. DHS OIG Investigation

DHS OIG initially declined to investigate the Cartagena matter. After receiving a request from Congress, however, Acting Inspector General Charles Edwards agreed to undertake an investigation. DHS OIG limited the scope of the investigation to the events of Cartagena, and referred all reported information of broader organizational issues within USSS to OIG’s Inspections Division to be included in a later “culture report.” The investigation, which substantiated the allegations of misconduct, culminated in a Report of Investigation (ROI) titled “USSS Cartagena Review” that was transmitted to then-Secretary Napolitano on September 26, 2012.¹³⁰ While the ROI was transmitted after Sullivan’s May 23, 2012 testimony to HSGAC, any new information should have prompted USSS to inform Congress of the additional information pertaining to Sullivan’s testimony.

DHS OIG did not initially release the ROI publicly. The ROI contains information contradicting Sullivan’s testimony to HSGAC that individuals engaged in the misconduct had not previously engaged in similar misconduct, individuals who brought FFNs back to their rooms did not have sensitive documents in their rooms, and that this type of misconduct was known to not be tolerated.¹³¹ The ROI also contains information about employee perceptions and awareness of previous misconduct that undermines Sullivan’s assurances there was no cultural problem within USSS.

During the course of the investigation, DHS OIG interviewed 251 USSS employees about the misconduct in Cartagena. Thirty-two employees declined to be interviewed, including ten senior level managers or senior executives.¹³² Less than half of those interviewed believed the events in Cartagena to be an anomaly, and eleven relayed knowledge of similar misconduct on other occasions.¹³³ DHS OIG did not interview the FFNs involved because the Department of Justice (DOJ) denied OIG’s request for a Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty (MLAT).¹³⁴ An MLAT would have allowed OIG to work with Colombian authorities. DOJ denied this request because OIG sought the information for a congressional proceeding rather than a U.S. criminal matter.¹³⁵ Due to the denial of the MLAT, OIG relied on the FFN statements previously obtained by USSS.¹³⁶

The ROI contained information related to similar alleged incidents of misconduct and general perceptions and attitudes regarding similar misconduct. One employee involved in the Cartagena misconduct told DHS OIG he “heard stories of people getting prostitutes while on international trips and suspected it was common in countries where prostitution was prevalent, such as Indonesia, Japan, Korea, and Brazil.”¹³⁷ He believed “being with prostitutes was tolerated by USSS supervisors, as long as you did not get caught.”¹³⁸ He further stated USSS supervisors also participate by getting prostitutes themselves.¹³⁹ Another employee stated “he had brought women to his hotel rooms on numerous occasions . . . both in the U.S. and abroad.”¹⁴⁰

Another employee involved in the misconduct told DHS OIG investigators he witnessed similar behavior on “other foreign trips” in two continents, including witnessing “[agents] from [the Presidential Protective Division] drinking excessively and ‘hooking up’ with ‘working girls’ and ‘non working girls.’”¹⁴¹ According to the DHS OIG report, he knew this because other agents used him to “translate with girls and negotiate with the prostitutes because he spoke Spanish in return for them buying him drinks.”¹⁴²

The same agent told DHS OIG “on another occasion, [he] returned to his assigned hotel from a club with a USSS supervisor in a taxi and the supervisor went to the front desk to advise them he [the supervisor] was expecting a young lady to come back to his room for the night.”¹⁴³ When investigators asked one of the more senior employees why so many USSS employees involved did not know of others engaged in similar behavior, he explained “considering how much USSS [agents] travel they learn what is permissible and legal in certain locations overseas and what is not.”¹⁴⁴

Information in the ROI demonstrates a general belief that those involved in the misconduct believed USSS tolerated this type of behavior. Many of the USSS personnel involved cited other instances where they believed USSS had failed to discipline fellow employees, including supervisors, for similar behavior.¹⁴⁵ Several of these incidents are detailed later in this report in the USSS Culture and Accountability for Misconduct section.¹⁴⁶

At a minimum, the ROI suggests that the individuals involved did not believe their behavior constituted grounds for strong discipline. One said he “had never been instructed to not bring females back to his hotel room” and “USSS Security Clearance Division held a meeting . . . and advised that you do not have to report a one night stand with a foreign national.”¹⁴⁷ Another stated he “attended a counterintelligence briefing . . . along with many other SAs, wherein they were told that ‘one night stands’ with foreign nationals were acceptable and only needed to be reported if the relationship continued.”¹⁴⁸ The individual provided signed statements from other agents to corroborate this information.¹⁴⁹ An individual not involved in the misconduct told DHS OIG that “USSS personnel on detail may meet members of the opposite sex and have consensual sex” and that he “saw nothing wrong with behavior and commented ‘to each their own.’”¹⁵⁰ Another described hearing of “‘wheels up’ parties” and the term “Wheels Up, Rings Off.”¹⁵¹

Two of the most senior employees involved in the misconduct expected their punishments to be much less severe, signaling comparisons to past instances of misconduct. One believed USSS would only temporarily remove him from duty as a punishment¹⁵² and reportedly commented: “I better not get time on the beach for this.”¹⁵³ “Time on the beach” is law enforcement slang for unpaid administrative leave. Another reported being told by two managers that he would probably only get 3-5 days punishment.¹⁵⁴ That agent ultimately retired after being allowed to use all of his sick leave.¹⁵⁵ A more junior employee also reported being told if it “would not have been for the media interest, this situation would have been handled differently.”¹⁵⁶ That perception was echoed by another employee involved in the misconduct, who told DHS OIG that “because of media coverage and embarrassment to the agency, [I] was punished more severely.”¹⁵⁷

It is unlikely Sullivan was not aware of such attitudes and the general perception of misconduct, making his testimony to Congress even more unacceptable. Further undermining Sullivan’s testimony and USSS’s investigation, according to the DHS OIG investigation, four employees who brought FFNs back to their hotel rooms had USSS documents or equipment in their hotel room safes.¹⁵⁸ These four employees are in addition to the three employees who the USSS investigation discovered had documents or equipment in their rooms when they brought an FFN back.¹⁵⁹ It is troubling DHS OIG uncovered information USSS did not relative to this central security concern. It demonstrates the inaccuracy of Sullivan’s testimony that “none of the 12 individuals [who brought FFNs to the hotel] had any sensitive security documents, firearms, radios, or other security-related equipment in their hotel room.”¹⁶⁰ Many employees not involved in the misconduct told DHS OIG that they had stored classified material, their weapons, or other sensitive or work-related documents, such as their schedules or credentials, in their hotel room safes.¹⁶¹ The concerns involved with handling such information and equipment are heightened in an agency with an accepting attitude about having casual sexual relationships while on duty.

The ROI also contained adverse allegations about USSS's handling of discipline related to the misconduct. DHS OIG, in an interview with one of the individuals who engaged in the misconduct in Cartagena, learned that another individual engaged in the misconduct allegedly "threatened to go to the media with knowledge of several other incidents similar to the situation in Cartagena, but was allowed to keep his position as a result."¹⁶² That employee was initially placed on administrative leave,¹⁶³ but ultimately later resigned.¹⁶⁴ The ROI does not contain a finding to support or negate the allegation.

D. Standards for Sexual Misconduct

FINDING: Standards for sexual behavior as they pertain to maintaining security clearances may not have been applied consistently.

Punishment for the misconduct in Cartagena appears to have largely hinged on whether the employee paid an FFN for sexual services or knew the FFN was a prostitute. This is in contrast to Sullivan's testimony that USSS takes all "casual sexual relationships" while on duty very seriously. Specifically, of the thirteen employees involved, three brought FFNs back to their rooms and engaged in sexual activity, did not pay the FFN, and stated they did not believe that the FFNs were prostitutes. These employees received only non-disciplinary Security Clearance Warning Letters and Memoranda of Counseling, and had their security clearances reinstated.¹⁶⁵ Unlike other documents that become a permanent part of a federal employee's record, a Memorandum of Counseling does not stay in an employee's personnel file.¹⁶⁶ If USSS actually took all "casual sexual activity" seriously, then these three employees would have received more severe discipline similar to the other ten employees involved.

Under federal adjudicative guidelines, certain types of behavior are deemed security concerns and may result in an individual losing his or her security clearance.¹⁶⁷ One such condition is "sexual behavior that causes an individual to be vulnerable to coercion, exploitation, or duress."¹⁶⁸ The Adjudicative Guidelines also highlight concerns with "conduct involving questionable judgment, lack of candor, dishonesty, or unwillingness to comply with rule and regulations.”¹⁶⁹ Furthermore, “conduct, especially while traveling outside the U.S., which may make the individual vulnerable to exploitation, pressure, or coercion by a foreign person, group, government, or country” is also a security concern.¹⁷⁰ Thus, the non-payment of an FFN for sexual activity—the apparent basis for the disparate treatment of individuals involved in the misconduct—does not fully mitigate the inherent security risks of such an encounter. An employee who does not pay an FFN for sexual activity still leaves himself open to blackmail and being seduced into compromising situations. These concerns are compounded by alcohol use.

After Cartagena, USSS issued the Table of Penalties and the Standards of Ethical, Professional, & Personal Conduct. The Table of Penalties outlines two separate offenses for sexual activity while on duty—one for the solicitation of payment for sexual services and another for sexual activity without solicitation or payment. The former offense can result in a standard penalty of forty-five days of unpaid leave, fourteen-thirty days of unpaid leave if the conduct is mitigated, and removal if the conduct is aggravated.¹⁷¹ The latter offense can result in a standard penalty of fourteen days unpaid leave, five-ten days of unpaid leave if the conduct is mitigated, and removal if the conduct is aggravated.¹⁷² The delineation of these two different penalties reflects the current legal status of prostitution throughout most of the United States. The recognition of the need for discipline for an agent who engages in a casual sexual relationship while on duty appears to be reflected in this new penalty.

E. Summary

In his testimony to HSGAC, Sullivan spoke positively of accountability and abatement of misconduct at USSS. Unfortunately, the facts uncovered by USSS and DHS OIG tell a different story. In finding that less than half of those interviewed by DHS OIG considered the behavior in Cartagena to be an anomaly, and based on the behavior and attitudes demonstrated in emails uncovered by USSS, the results of the investigations into Cartagena demonstrate that, at least as of April 2012, problems pertaining to alcohol and sexual behavior while on duty were not isolated to the incidents in Colombia.

elevator operated by a CDC contract guard to move inside the building. After President Obama made his final movement on the freight elevator, USSS personnel observed the contract guard in the departure tent taking pictures of the President’s limousine. USSS personnel instructed the contract guard to leave the tent. Once the President departed, USSS personnel confronted the contract guard. According to USSS, only when CDC personnel subsequently requested the guard’s weapon did USSS realized that he was armed—and had been armed and was unpinned while in the elevator with the President.¹⁷³

USSS initially determined the CDC did not provide adequate information about its contract security guards in advance of the President’s visit, and attempted to place the blame for the security breaches on the CDC. The Committee’s investigation and a second investigation by USSS, however, found that four days ahead of the President’s arrival, CDC submitted a Critical Systems Program questionnaire to USSS indicating all CDC security personnel would be armed. All USSS personnel later interviewed by USSS stated they had a clear understanding, prior to the event, that all contract security personnel would be armed.¹⁷⁴

The Committee’s investigation found a string of failures that resulted in three breaches in President Obama’s security: first, by allowing unvetted armed guards in close proximity to the President; second, by allowing the President onto an elevator with an unpinned but armed individual with an arrest history, including an arrest for reckless conduct with a gun in an incident that involved shooting at a vehicle with a three-year-old child in the back seat; and third, by allowing that unpinned guard to follow the President into a departure tent. The failures were both on the part of the Presidential Protective Division (PPD), which travels with the President, as well as USSS personnel in the Atlanta Field Office. The circumstances surrounding these breaches are detailed below.

A. Underlying Incident

i. Failure to Solicit and Obtain Information for Background Checks

FINDING: USSS failed to conduct background checks on CDC’s security guards, all of whom were armed.

In order to conduct background checks, USSS requests the name and identifying information of individuals who might come into proximity with the president. In this case, USSS “failed to properly solicit and obtain personal information from the CDC Security Services necessary to conduct name and [Arms Reach Program] checks in accordance with USSS/PPD policy.”¹⁷⁵ CDC officials told the Committee that USSS “only asked for a spreadsheet listing the names of people (along with date of birth, sex, title, and [Social Security Number]) who were meeting with the President while at CDC,” and that “[n]one of the staff of the Security Services Office were on any list provided to USSS to include the contract guard in the elevator who functions within the office.”¹⁷⁶ A USSS special agent separately requested [the CDC security office] send the list of names and personal identifiers directly to White House staff instead of him.¹⁷⁷ When White House staff subsequently sent the list, which did not include CDC security personnel, to a USSS special agent, that special agent forwarded the list to the PPD Lead Agent and Protective Intelligence advance agent without reviewing it.¹⁷⁸ It is not apparent whether the PPD Lead Agent or the Protective Intelligence advance agent reviewed the list or noticed it was missing CDC security personnel. Had they reviewed it they should have noticed the missing names of CDC security personnel.

Despite initially blaming CDC, USSS eventually found that PPD and Atlanta Field Office site agents shouldered most of the responsibility for the breach as a result of these lapses. CDC gave USSS notice that CDC security personnel would be armed, arguably increasing the need for USSS to conduct background checks on those individuals. A USSS security questionnaire completed by CDC prior to the President’s visit specifically asked if on-site security personnel were armed.¹⁷⁹ CDC answered affirmatively and returned the questionnaire to USSS on September 12, 2014, four days before the President’s visit.¹⁸⁰

Security 1) How many security personnel on site? a. How many per shift? 1st shift — 2nd shift — 3rd shift — b. Are they armed? YES

CDC confirmed to the Committee, on a phone briefing and in email, that all guards at the CDC were armed.¹⁸¹

One of the special agents in charge of the visit recently returned to the PPD shift from the First Lady’s detail.¹⁸² This was his first significant site advance visit after returning.¹⁸³ Atlanta Field Office management, USSS advance members, and the CDC Security management team all indicated they believed this special agent was overwhelmed.¹⁸⁴

ii. Proximity of Armed CDC Security Personnel to President

FINDING: USSS allowed unvetted armed guards near the President.

CDC told the Committee “no other guards [besides the elevator operator] came within close proximity to the President.”¹⁸⁵ Director Clancy reiterated that point at a November 19, 2014 House Judiciary hearing in the following exchange with Representative George E.B. Holding:

HOLDING: One other follow-up question, then I’ll yield back. Regarding the security guard who was armed and hadn’t been cleared, were there any other security guards armed but not [cleared] at the event in Atlanta?

CLANCY: Sir, as I’ve been briefed, there were other armed security at the CDC. But they were not on the inner perimeter. They were on the outside of our inner perimeter, which is not uncommon on the outside perimeter to have arms...

HOLDING: So, there were armed security who had not been cleared on the outside of the perimeter, Were there any on the inside of the perimeter, like the individual that we’ve noted?

CLANCY: As I’ve been briefed, sir, not on the inside of the perimeter, other than the elevator operator who was armed.¹⁸⁶

However, USSS’s first review indicated there were security personnel in close proximity to the President.¹⁸⁷ That review stated, “It was discovered after the visit that none of the security personnel in close proximity to [President Obama] were name checked or [Arms Reach Program] checked because they did not submit any of their own names.”¹⁸⁸

In an email sent the day after the incident, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAIC) Jack Coffey wrote to Special Agent in Charge (SAIC) Robert Buster, head of PPD:

No other armed CDC security officers were in our secure areas. They were in non secure areas. We did have unarmed CDC officers in our secure area. They were not name checked and should have been.¹⁸⁹

The aforementioned information provided by the CDC shows that all CDC security personnel were armed that day, and that CDC had sent notification of that fact to USSS. Thus, the guards mentioned by Coffey as being “unarmed CDC officers in our secure area” would have in fact been armed, and Director Clancy’s testimony that there were not armed guards “on the inside of the perimeter” appears inconsistent. CDC also told the Committee that USSS agents interacted with guards all over campus and “had no particular reaction to the visible weapons.”¹⁹⁰

Additionally, USSS’s second review stated that armed contract security guards supported the USSS security plan by holding exterior posts and two stairwell access posts.¹⁹¹ USSS failed to conduct background checks on these guards just as it did all other CDC guards that day.

iii. Distribution of Credentials at CDC

FINDING: USSS improperly distributed pins to CDC security staff without conducting appropriate checks.

A basic element of USSS’s protective operations at site visits is the use of special credentials, known as “SARGE pins,” to help control who has access to the various layers of security around the president.¹⁹² These pins are physical temporary identifiers worn on an individual’s lapel.¹⁹³ Each pin has a specific letter: S for Staff, A for Airport, R for Resident, G for Guest, and E for Enforcement (armed law enforcement or private security).¹⁹⁴

Without having conducted the appropriate name checks, a USSS special agent provided pins to the CDC Security Services management team and to another USSS special agent to distribute.¹⁹⁵ The distribution of these pins without having conducted the proper background checks violated USSS policy. Thus, as USSS’s second review found, “PPD and Atlanta [Field Office] CDC site agents failed to appropriately control the distribution of SARGE System pins to only name checked personnel.”¹⁹⁶

Given USSS’s failure to vet guards and follow proper pin distribution procedures, the Committee believes that the policies and procedures for advance visits, specifically regarding the vetting and pinning of individuals who are in close proximity to the President, should be further analyzed by DHS OIG.

iv. Elevator Operator's Arrest History

FINDING: USSS did not realize the armed guard who rode in an elevator with the President was previously arrested for reckless conduct with a gun.

An armed security guard was stationed in the elevator in order to operate it for the President. Like the other guards, USSS did not conduct a background check. When USSS did later conduct a records check on the armed guard, it returned a criminal history of three arrests for misdemeanors.¹⁹⁷ One of the arrests was for reckless conduct with a weapon, when he intervened in a shooting incident at a neighbor's apartment by shooting at and hitting a fleeing suspect's vehicle while a three-year old was in the back seat, though this charge was Nolle Prossed due to the death of the defendant (the fleeing suspect) and a primary witness.¹⁹⁸ The two other arrests were for simple assault during a domestic dispute with the guard's future wife, and for simple assault after a domestic dispute with his sister, and these arrests were stricken from his record and dismissed, respectively.¹⁹⁹ The guard was never convicted for any of the three misdemeanors.²⁰⁰

Had USSS properly screened the armed guard and learned of his arrest history, he likely would have been excluded from serving as an elevator operator per USSS protocols.²⁰¹

v. Allowing Unpinned Individuals near President

FINDING: USSS allowed the President to enter an elevator with an unpinned individual.

Neither the freight elevator manifests contained in the USSS Preliminary Survey report nor the USSS CDC site diagrams included a generic elevator operator position.²⁰² The PPD site agent claimed that on September 11, 2014, he requested the CDC Security Services team provide an unarmed elevator operator during the President's visit.²⁰³ The CDC Security Services team has no record of USSS making any such request.²⁰⁴

Regardless, USSS did not provide the armed guard elevator operator with a SARGE pin.²⁰⁵ He should have received one under current USSS procedures had he passed the proper screening.²⁰⁶ Thus, USSS found that PPD and Atlanta Filed Office CDC site agents “failed to appropriately vet, manifest and SARGE pin the freight elevator operator.”²⁰⁷

Although other USSS personnel knew the elevator operator was armed, the PPD site agent also “failed to ask [the security guard] if he was armed prior to the arrival of President Obama.”²⁰⁸

Even disregarding the fact that the guard was armed and had a violent arrest history, USSS should not have allowed the President into an elevator with an unpinned individual. The pinning system is USSS’s primary means of controlling presidential access. Allowing the President into an elevator with an unpinned individual represents a major breach of the President’s security.

vi. Breach at President’s Departure

FINDING: The armed guard also breached the President’s security at the departure tent.

After President Obama made his final movement from the freight elevator to a loading dock to depart the CDC, the contract guard followed the President and the group accompanying him.²⁰⁹ The guard then began taking pictures of the President with his cell phone.²¹⁰ Despite being unpinned and armed, he was not stopped by USSS at the time. USSS would later find that the “PPD shift failed to provide adequate rear coverage of the security formation on the movement from the freight elevator on the second floor to the departure tent.”²¹¹

This breach was only detected because after taking the initial pictures, the guard went back to the freight elevator, saw that no one else was waiting to get on the elevator, and then returned to the President’s departure tent through a different entrance to take more pictures.²¹² At that time, SAIC Buster observed the guard, who was motioned out of the tent by another USSS special agent.²¹³

After the President had departed, USSS contacted the guard’s management.²¹⁴ When management asked for the guard’s gun during a subsequent interview, the USSS special agent realized that the security guard had been armed throughout the day.²¹⁵ The guard was subsequently fired for leaving his post and for lying about his actions by telling USSS personnel he did not attempt to take pictures of the President.²¹⁶

vii. USSS Protective Methodology

FINDING: USSS did not adhere to its own protective methodology while the President was at the CDC.

USSS failed to comply with its own protective methodology, jeopardizing the security of the President in the process. According to the Protective Methodology section of USSS’s Protective Operations Manual, a core principle of the mission is “proactive protection,” or the “the use of preventative controls and countermeasures to avoid incidents that may place protected persons, places, and events at risk of harm or disruption.”²¹⁷ The manual lists components that are important to providing a safe and secure environment.²¹⁸

Manual : Protective Operations	Section : OPO-02
RO : OPO	Date : 08/24/2007

The process of providing a safe and secure environment begins with the following components:

- Gathering, analyzing, and controlling the dissemination of relevant intelligence information
- The protective advance
- The Preliminary Survey – specification of every aspect of the visit or event which may have an impact on the protective environment, including:
 - The arrival and departure of protectees
 - The vetting and screening of those who may be in proximity to protectees

As the facts above demonstrate, USSS violated its own protective methodology prior to the President’s visit, during the President’s time in the CDC building, and while the President was departing. USSS’s failure to properly take into account information that all guards would be armed, failure to conduct appropriate background checks, failure to stop the President from getting into an elevator with an unpinned individual, and failure to secure the departure tent area amount to violations of all five of the above bullets.

viii. Video Evidence of the Incident

FINDING: Video coverage of the President’s CDC site visit did not capture any of the breaches.

The Committee obtained and reviewed all relevant video footage from the day of the President's visit to the CDC. None of the footage shows the armed guard in the elevator with the President. There was no taped footage from the elevator or in the conference room where the interview of the guard took place, and no camera visibility of the President's departure where the armed guard breached the security formation in an attempt to take pictures of the President. There is video of the armed guard when he left his post to make a phone call, as shown in the picture below.²¹⁹ Not only was the President accompanied by an armed security guard who had not been properly vetted by USSS, there is no video evidence of the guard's proximity to the President.

B. Subsequent Developments

i. USSS's Incomplete and Problematic Initial Review

²¹⁹ Centers for Disease Control & Prevention, Surveillance Video of Pres. Obama's Sept. 16, 2014 Visit to Atlanta CDC.

In the hours following the breach, USSS personnel met at the Atlanta Field Office to review the incident.²²⁰ The Committee obtained the email summary of that meeting. Key excerpts include:

- CDC policy states that security personnel are not allowed to photograph any visiting VIPs. [Security guard] admitted to knowing this policy and intentionally violated that policy because he was excited to see the President.
- Subsequent investigation determined that [security guard] had a criminal history that would have precluded him from serving as the elevator operator but not excluded him from serving in a security function at that site.
- Was [security guard] wearing an E pin [credential for law enforcement]?²²¹ No, because he is not a sworn officer. He also was not issued an R pin [credential for residents] because his name was not submitted by CDC security supervisors to [special agent] for [Arms Reach Program]²²² checks. It was discovered after the visit that none of the security personnel in close proximity to [President Obama] were name checked or [Arms Reach Program] checked because they did not submit any of their own names.
- Did [special agent] make a request that the elevator operator not be armed? SA [special agent] stated he did make the request of one of two CDC security supervisors. When asked, both supervisors could not recall this request. However, it was also discovered there were additional omissions by CDC security regarding name checks and [Arms Reach Program] checks.²²³

The Arms Reach Program is an enhanced background screening of individuals who will have private or close proximity to the President and utilizes a review of partner agencies' databases. The procedures of the program are classified.

The above email inaccurately places the blame on CDC by implying that it was CDC's responsibility ensure that name checks and Arms Reach Program checks were successfully completed. It was not the responsibility of CDC personnel to check their own names. That responsibility belonged to USSS alone.²²⁴ Further, as discussed above, CDC provided all information requested by USSS in advance of the visit.

The leadership of PPD received some, but not all, of this information in an email from ASAIC Jack Coffey to SAIC Robert Buster. After updating SAIC Buster, ASAIC Coffey forwarded the update he provided to SAIC Buster to another USSS employee with the instructions, “Close hold on this please. Do not disseminate or discuss.”²²⁵ The individual responded: “Yes sir, mums [sic] the word.”²²⁶

USSS referred information from the interview with the armed guard elevator operator and subsequent meeting at the Atlanta Field Office to the Protective Intelligence and Assessment Division, but the case was not referred for further action, and the review resulted in no discipline.²²⁷

ii. Failure to Fully Brief White House Staff

FINDING: USSS failed to inform White House staff during a briefing after the incident that the guard was armed.

When provided with a clear opportunity to inform White House staff that the guard in the elevator with President Obama was armed but had not received a background check, USSS failed to do so. According to a USSS interview with SAIC Buster, USSS briefed the White House staff in Atlanta on the inappropriate photography portion of the incident.²²⁸ USSS did not, however, tell White House staff or President Obama that the guard in question had not received a background check, or that he carried a weapon while in close proximity to the President.²²⁹ The failure to provide this information to the White House is inexplicable.

iii. Then-Director Pierson’s Testimony to Congress

FINDING: Then-Director Julia Pierson did not inform the President his security had been breached until two weeks later, after the incident was made public.

News of the incident became public on September 30, 2014, hours after a Committee hearing on the September 19, 2014 White House fence-jumping incident.²³⁰ At that hearing Chairman Chaffetz, then Chairman of the National Security Subcommittee, and Julia Pierson, then-Director of USSS, had the following exchange:

CHAFFETZ: What percentage of the time do you inform the President if his personal security [has], in any way, shape, or form, been breached?

PIERSON: Percent of the time? One hundred percent of the time we would advise the President.

CHAFFETZ: You would advise the President?

PIERSON: Yes.

CHAFFETZ: In the calendar year 2014, how many times has that happened?

PIERSON: I have not briefed him, with the exception of one occasion for the September 19 incident.

CHAFFETZ: So the only time you have briefed the President on perimeter security, the President's personal security, the First Family's security, has been one time in 2014?

PIERSON: That is correct.²³¹

After this hearing, however, the Committee learned that neither Pierson nor anyone else at USSS notified the President of the CDC breach until September 30, 2014, hours before the story broke in the media.²³² Pierson knew about the incident, including the fact the guard was armed, within hours after it occurred on September 16, 2014.²³³ Thus, despite Pierson's testimony that she advised the President on security breaches "one hundred percent of the time," the President did not know about this breach in his security for two weeks. Although President Obama initially expressed confidence in Director Pierson's leadership of the agency, the next day, he accepted Pierson's resignation.²³⁴

iv. Second USSS Review of the Incident

FINDING: USSS conducted a more thorough review of the incident after media attention.

If not for the attention from the media and Congress following the revelation of the CDC incident, USSS's investigation may have been limited to its cursory, and incorrect, initial review. After Secretary Johnson became aware of the CDC incident on September 30, 2014, the same day the story became public, he ordered USSS to conduct an additional review.²³⁵ This second, more thorough, review disputed some of USSS's original findings regarding the solicitation and collection of information necessary for name checks being the fault of CDC.²³⁶

USSS's second and more thorough review included 30 interviews with individuals involved in the incident.²³⁷ It was completed on October 17, 2014.²³⁸ As a result of the second review, USSS issued one special agent a ten-day Proposed Suspension.²³⁹ USSS does not appear to have proposed discipline for any other individuals involved, including any of the special agent's supervisors or other agents involved. There also does not appear to be any discipline in connection to the armed guard breaching the "rear coverage of the security formation on the movement from the freight elevator on the second floor to the departure tent."²⁴⁰

v. Inaccurate Information in Letter to the Committee

FINDING: USSS provided incomplete information to Congress.

On October 7, 2014, Members of the Committee wrote to USSS seeking clarification of several issues.²⁴¹ In a November 13, 2014 response, Acting Director Clancy stated: "As the newly appointed Acting Director, I am devoting my utmost attention to the recent incidents, and I appreciate the opportunity to address your concerns."²⁴²

In that letter, USSS referenced both its same-day review of the incident as well as the second review ordered by Secretary Johnson, which was completed on October 17, 2014—well prior to the November 13, 2014 letter to the Committee.²⁴³ However, USSS failed to include the results of the second review, which differed substantially from the results of the first review, in the November 13, 2014 letter to the Committee.²⁴⁴

For example, the November 13 letter incorrectly stated that USSS employees did not know the CDC contract security guard who operated the elevator was armed until an interview with the guard immediately following the incident when his supervisor asked for his pistol.²⁴⁵

- 4:40 p.m. (approximately) – The Presidential Protective Division (PPD) site agent contacted CDC Security Services management regarding the attempts of the contractor who operated the elevator to take photographs of President Obama in the departure area. The PPD site agent met with CDC Security Services management, supervisors from Professional Security Corporation (PSC), and the contractor in question in a nearby room. During the meeting, a PSC supervisor suspended the contractor and took his PSC-issued pistol. The PPD site agent realizes that this individual was armed while operating the elevator and requests a Secret Service protective intelligence team to interview the contractor. This is the first time Secret Service employees became aware that the contractor was armed.

While this may have been the first time that the PPD site agent realized that the guard was armed, it was not the first time that USSS employees generally became aware of this fact. USSS’s second investigation had confirmed nearly a month prior to this letter that “all of the USSS advance team personnel interviewed had a clear understanding that PSC personnel were armed.”²⁴⁶ This applied to both security personnel in uniform, with visible weapons, and those who wore suited attire and did not have visible weapons, such as the armed elevator operator.²⁴⁷ Furthermore, CDC guards and USSS agents participated in multiple rehearsals with the guard in question present and armed.²⁴⁸

C. Standards for Security Personnel at Presidential Visits

FINDING: An individual with an arrest history that includes reckless conduct with a gun may not be disqualified from serving in a security function during a Presidential visit.

This incident highlights the possibility that different protocols should be considered. Despite the armed guard’s arrest history, and the fact that it would have disqualified him from operating the elevator for the President, he would not have been excluded from serving in a security function at the site for the President's visit.²⁴⁹

According to the CDC, the guard's "arrest history did not disqualify him from employment as a security guard at CDC."²⁵⁰ The guard met various background standards and checks before working at the CDC, including: (1) a National Agency Check with Written Inquiry (NACI) investigation through the Office of Personnel Management, which dates back five years and contacts law enforcement authorities; (2) a comprehensive pre-assignment evaluation by his contract employer, which included a search of records of criminal convictions; (3) an investigation by the Georgia Board of Private Detective and Security Agencies to receive a license to carry a weapon for private security, which disqualifies individuals with criminal convictions; and (4) a Bioterrorism Security Risk Assessment by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) Criminal Justice Information Services Division in order to receive access to select agents and/or toxins.²⁵¹

Passage of these checks and employment at CDC, however, does not mean an individual should be allowed to provide security support to the President. At the very minimum, USSS should be aware of the criminal backgrounds or arrest histories of those providing security to the President, and have clear protocols pertaining to resulting prohibitions providing security functions.

D. Summary

USSS jeopardized the President's security during his visit to the CDC. USSS allowed the President's security to be breached at least three times in addition to failing to follow its own security protocols in a number of ways.

USSS's failure to promptly and adequately investigate the incident, and forthrightly address concerns about the incident, was also problematic. First, USSS did not inform the President or his staff that the guard in the elevator had been armed and had a violent arrest history, including an arrest for reckless conduct with a gun; second, USSS conducted a problematic initial review that inaccurately placed blame on CDC, and may not have conducted the more thorough review if not for media attention focused on the incident; third, USSS provided inaccurate information at a Committee hearing; fourth, USSS provided what appears to be inaccurate information at a House Judiciary Committee hearing; and fifth, USSS provided inaccurate information in response to a letter from the Committee.

4. March 4, 2015 Incident

On March 9, 2015, Director Clancy learned of allegations that five days earlier, on March 4, two USSS supervisors, Marc Connolly and George Ogilvie, possibly intoxicated after attending a retirement party for a fellow supervisor, interfered with a crime scene surrounding a threatened bomb just outside White House grounds.²⁵² Connolly was Deputy Special Agent in Charge (DSAIC)—the second-in-command—on President Obama’s Presidential Protective Division (PPD). Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge (ATSAIC) Ogilvie was a senior supervisor in the Washington (D.C.) Field Office’s protection squad.²⁵³ USSS personnel referred the matter to DHS OIG that day.²⁵⁴ Two days later, after being informed that press accounts of the allegations would be published later that evening, Director Clancy notified the Committee of the incident.²⁵⁵

The next day, the Committee requested information on the incident, including all video footage, photographs, or audio recordings.²⁵⁶ The Committee understands that USSS has undertaken some efforts to extend its formerly 72-hour retention period for security video footage. Various state agencies, public universities, and private sector entities routinely retain security video tapes for at least thirty days and USSS would be well served to follow such best practices.

Director Clancy subsequently briefed Committee members on March 17, 2015. To obtain more information, the Committee sent an extensive document request on March 19, 2015.²⁵⁷ Between mid-April to mid-May 2015, Committee staff also conducted transcribed interviews of six USSS employees on duty or with responsibilities pertaining to the March 4 incident.²⁵⁸

On May 14, 2015, DHS OIG released its public report, which concluded “it was more likely than not that both Connolly’s and Ogilvie’s judgment was impaired by alcohol.”²⁵⁹ According to DHS OIG’s investigation, DSAIC Connolly, ATSAIC Ogilvie, and two non-agent

USSS personnel with them were likely the last to leave a nearby retirement party that night.²⁶⁰ The report further revealed that at 10:45 p.m.—just minutes before Ogilvie drove Connolly to the White House grounds in Ogilvie’s government-owned vehicle—Ogilvie paid the bartender for eight glasses of scotch, two vodka drinks, one glass of wine, and three glasses of beer.²⁶¹ Of those, Ogilvie could not recall what happened to five of the glasses of scotch, the glass of wine, and two or three of the beers, claiming he gave them away to others but being unable to recall the identities of the beneficiaries.²⁶²

During this same time, at the White House, UD officers were on high alert after an individual had placed a package outside of a guard booth and stated it contained a bomb. The area was closed off to await the arrival of the Washington Metropolitan Police Department bomb squad.²⁶³ Yet both at the bar and in ATSAIC Ogilvie’s government-owned vehicle afterwards, both ATSAIC Ogilvie and DSAIC Connolly failed to check their devices indicating that the White House was at a Condition Yellow.²⁶⁴ Approximately thirty minutes after the bomb threat, Ogilvie and Connolly approached a roadblock closing off traffic to the area,²⁶⁵ ignored an officer directing the vehicle to turn around,²⁶⁶ turned on the vehicle’s police lights or sounded an air horn to pass,²⁶⁷ and slowly drove straight to the precise E Street entrance where the alleged bomb was awaiting examination by the bomb squad.²⁶⁸ Surveillance footage shows the vehicle maneuvered around a steel bike rack, “push[ed] [a] barrel . . . more than five feet . . . to shove the barrel out of the way,” and “passed within inches of the suspicious package”—a threatened bomb outside of USSS’s most important protected residence, the White House.²⁶⁹ DHS OIG concluded, “[T]wo highly experienced Secret Service supervisors drove into a crime scene inches from what the rest of the Secret Service was treating as a potential explosive device and which, under different circumstances, could have endangered their own lives and those of the UD officers responding.”²⁷⁰

When confronted by UD officers at a vehicle blocking gate 100 yards further into the White House complex, Ogilvie and Connolly initially failed to respond, described by one officer as having a “deer in the headlights look.”²⁷¹ The officers notified their watch commander, who walked from an entirely different part of the White House complex to come investigate the situation with DSAIC Connolly and ATSAIC Ogilvie, who acknowledged to the watch commander that they had been drinking.²⁷²

Notifications of the incident that night went from the watch commander up the chain of command, but ultimately stopped with the two leaders of the UD, one of whom essentially reports through DSAIC Connolly to PPD SAIC Robert Buster.²⁷³ No one in USSS wrote up the incident.²⁷⁴ Despite both agents and UD officers talking of the incident for days, the Office of Professional Responsibility would not be notified of the incident until March 9 when Director Clancy himself learned of the incident—through a source outside of USSS.²⁷⁵

The purpose of the DHS OIG investigation “centered around the activities of two senior Secret Service personnel.”²⁷⁶ The Committee’s investigation into this incident also included further review of how USSS responded to and reported the possible misconduct of the senior agents, as well as how the agency responded to and investigated the original incident of the suspicious package that was claimed to be a bomb. Although the DHS OIG report provides a substantial narrative of most of the underlying facts these circumstances, it did not discuss some of the significant issues of the original incident. These are described below.

A. Unnecessary Delay in Arresting Heather Brookins

FINDING: A warrant was not issued for the suspect in a timely manner.

On March 4, 2015, the suspect pertaining to the original incident of the suspicious package, Heather Brookins, evaded initial arrest after placing what she claimed to be a bomb outside an entry gate to White House. Three days later, on March 7, 2015, the Louisa County Sheriff’s Office in Virginia apprehended her on unrelated charges.²⁷⁷ The Committee interviewed several USSS personnel involved in the response to the suspicious package, including UD Officer Samuel Mason. Stationed at a guard booth designated “South Park 15,” located near E Street on the southeast corner of the White House complex, Officer Mason was on the scene when Brookins made the bomb threat. Officer Mason described the events:

Roughly 10:25 p.m. She pulled up. I saw her there. Like I said, 9 times out of 10, they’re waiting for the green light to do a left turn or something, they went the wrong way, et cetera. I gave her a few moments, and then I was going outside the booth. At the same time, she got out of her car, so I went to address her. The first thing I was telling her is, “Ma’am, you can’t park here,” because that’s, like I said, a thousand times a day.

Instantly, she arose my suspicion when she says, “I have something for you,” and I was like, “Ma’am, we can’t take packages. We can’t—we can’t do this. And, you know, you have to mail it or whatever,” you know, because we get that a lot of times, too, I want to mail a letter, I want to hand a letter, so on and so forth.

She's like, "I have something for you. It's a book . . . actually, it's a fing bomb."

And then I was like, "Back up." I was yelling at her; screamed back. She set it down—she laid it on the ground at that point. I retrieved my radio to alert the complex what was going on.

At that point, she was returned to her car. I went out to the car, opened up the closest door to me, which was the front passenger door. I was screaming at her, "Get out of the car. Get out." And she said, "I don't have to do anything you say," put it in reverse, went backwards 5, 6 feet or so. I was inside the pocket of the door, so she took me with her. That's when I leaned in, put it in park, and screamed at her again. No other assets were there yet, and I didn't want to run around on the front of the car or even the back at that time, obviously, if she went into reverse. Then she put it in drive and started—headed southbound on 15th Street.²⁷⁸

As USSS began to secure the area, UD officers attempted to locate Brookins' car.²⁷⁹ The officers at the scene provided a description of the car but not the license plate number.²⁸⁰ Within seconds of Brookins leaving the scene, two UD cruisers began pursuit.²⁸¹ One of the UD cruisers spotted a vehicle matching the description, but discontinued pursuit when a second UD cruiser radioed in that he stopped a vehicle matching the description.²⁸² However, the second cruiser stopped the wrong vehicle, allowing Brookins to evade arrest after cruisers discontinued pursuit of the first vehicle.²⁸³

After reporting the license plate number, a UD officer at the scene learned the owner of the car was married to Brookins, a person of record with USSS.²⁸⁴ Brookins encountered Capitol Police the day before while staying at a hotel in the area.²⁸⁵ USSS agents traveled to the hotel early in the morning after the incident but discovered that Brookins had already checked out.²⁸⁶ Only then did USSS issue a "be on the lookout" (BOLO) alert for Brookins.²⁸⁷ USSS agents traveled to Brookins' house early the same morning and interviewed her husband, who informed them that Brookins traveled to Virginia.²⁸⁸ USSS located Brookins at 6:00 p.m. on March 5, 2015, in Gordonsville, Virginia.²⁸⁹

USSS interviewed Brookins at 7:05 a.m. the next morning, March 6,²⁹⁰ but, according to USSS documents, agents were “unable to arrest the subject,” and that the warrant for her arrest was issued on March 10.²⁹¹ At 12:31 p.m., USSS’s Protective Intelligence Operations Center (PIOC) cancelled the BOLO for Brookins.²⁹² Later that night, Louisa County, Virginia Police responded to a verbal dispute involving Brookins at the hotel, but reported Brookins left the premises before they arrived.²⁹³

On the morning of March 7, Louisa County Police responded to a department store after receiving a report of a suspicious vehicle.²⁹⁴ The vehicle belonged to Brookins.²⁹⁵ Police found her sleeping in the driver’s seat and charged her with trespassing, loitering, disorderly conduct, and obstruction of justice after she threw items out the window and refused to comply with officers.²⁹⁶ When Brookins refused to exit the vehicle, officers broke the window to remove her.²⁹⁷ She was then committed to a hospital in Charlottesville, Virginia.²⁹⁸ However, when Louisa County Police contacted USSS’s PIOC that morning regarding Brookins’ status as a USSS look-out, USSS informed them the BOLO was no longer in effect.²⁹⁹

A warrant was not issued for Brookins until March 10—six days after the events of March 4—for Assault with a Dangerous Weapon, not for any bomb-related threats.³⁰⁰ Charges in Virginia were dismissed in lieu of other prosecution, and Brookins was then transferred to USSS custody and taken to federal court in southern Virginia.³⁰¹ Her case is pending.

B. Need for Clarity in Misconduct Investigations

³⁰¹ Email from Office of Gov’t & Pub. Affairs, U.S. Secret Service to H. Comm. on Oversight & Gov’t Reform Committee staff (Apr. 27, 2015).

Inspectors serve as the highest level of management in the USSS UD under the top three in the UD chain of command: the Chief, the Assistant Chief, and the Deputy Chief.³⁰² According to Inspector Keith Williams, when a UD employee is aware of misconduct, the practice is to report it up the chain of command to headquarters. Williams gave this hypothetical example for a UD officer, whose next-level reporting official is a sergeant, that was suspect of some type of misconduct:

If there's an incident that requires disciplinary action, the sergeant's involved with it who will inform his lieutenant, but it's the ultimate decision of the watch commander whether or not the disciplinary action will be sent up for recommendation. . . . It would be forwarded on to the deputy chief for his review, and then sent on to the Office of Integrity for their decision whether or not disciplinary action will go forward.³⁰³

Yet UD Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson, the third highest-ranking official in the UD and the highest-ranking operational UD official at the White House, provided conflicting information to the Committee as to his role compared with the role of the Office of Integrity or Office of Professional Responsibility. Initially, Dyson stated the Office of Professional Responsibility investigates allegations and determines whether misconduct occurred:³⁰⁴

- Q. Who is ultimately responsible in the Secret Service for investigating possible misconduct allegations to determine whether or not there was actual misconduct?
- A. So that would be the Office of Integrity, along with the Office of Professional Responsibility, the Inspection Division.

- Q. [I]f the Office of Integrity is supposed to investigate and determine if there is misconduct, would it be up to you to determine whether ³⁰³ H. Comm. on Oversight & Gov't Reform, Transcribed Interview of Keith Williams (Apr. 30, 2015), at 15-16 [hereinafter Williams Tr.].

³⁰⁴ In interview excerpts in this section, the Office of Integrity is often used interchangeably with the Office of Professional Responsibility. USSS personnel were unclear on which office misconduct should be reported to—one of the many areas of confusion USSS personnel evidenced regarding disciplinary procedures in the agency. The Office of Professional Responsibility, not the Office of Integrity, is in fact responsible for convening USSS's Intake Group to receive allegations of misconduct. The Office of Integrity only plays a role in ensuring consistency in discipline once allegations have been investigated. U.S. Secret Service Directives System, Office of the Dir. Manual, Section ITG-06(01), DISCIPLINARY AND ADVERSE ACTIONS – GENERAL, Jan. 31, 2014, at 5-6. However, the Office of Integrity also sits on the Intake Group, so the outcome should be the same regardless of which of these two entities allegations are conveyed to. Id. at 3. USSS personnel may possibly associate the Office of Integrity with investigating misconduct due to the fact that its creation was a highly-publicized event in response to the Cartagena scandal.

there's misconduct, or would it be ultimately up to the Office of Integrity?

A. It's ultimately up to the Office of Integrity.

Q. So your obligation is to report all potential misconduct to the Office of Integrity so that they can determine whether or not there was actual misconduct?

A. Well, it's up to them to determine whether or not it's actual misconduct and if there would be disciplinary action taken.³⁰⁵

Dyson, however could not provide a clear explanation of what matters should, in fact, be referred to the integrity process:

Q. What types of matters would you report to the Office of Integrity?

A. There is a wide range of things. If an officer violated some policy, but that's not necessarily always going to go to Integrity. It really varies. It's kind of difficult. There's no set rule on every single misconduct issue.

Q. So what would be the types of misconduct issues that would not—then for which there would not be an obligation to report to the Office of Integrity?

A. Well, I guess if we go back a little bit, if there's actual misconduct and it violates a policy, then that in itself will go to Integrity. So if we are speaking of misconduct, as we are, that generally would go to Integrity.³⁰⁶

Dyson ultimately stated a matter is only referred to the Office of Integrity after the UD makes its own determination on whether misconduct occurred:

Q. If there's an incident that takes place and there is any allegation that there may have—it may have involved misconduct, would that be something that you would need to report up the chain to the Office of Integrity?

A. That is something that I would look at, along with the watch commander of the shift, and then if there is some facts to show that there is some sort of misconduct, then we would take the next step.

³⁰⁵ Dyson Tr., supra note 302, at 13-15.

³⁰⁶ Id. at 12 (emphasis added).

But if there is just an allegation that something may have happened, I don't know that that would be reported to the Office of Integrity.

Q. So you would do the fact finding ultimately, not the Office of Integrity?

A. Not necessarily just a formal fact finding, but we would actually inquire as to what happened, or someone on my team, probably the watch commander, will look into the issue, and then they would advise me as to whether or not there's misconduct, and if there is actually misconduct, then it will be forwarded.

Q. Okay. So when you say, "if there is actually misconduct," so you make determination that there is or is not misconduct, and if you determine that there is misconduct, then it goes to the Office of Integrity just for disciplinary purposes?

A. Based on the information I receive from the supervisors, the watch commander included, and usually the inspectors, so they bring me the information, and then I will look at it, and if there is misconduct, then we will report it.³⁰⁷

C. Reliance on Self-Reporting of Misconduct

FINDING: USSS senior supervisors believed fellow senior supervisors would self-report their own misconduct.

After the March 4 incident, no one reported the full details of DSAIC Marc Connolly's conduct to SAIC Buster or the Office of Integrity. According to the DHS OIG report, Deputy Chief Dyson stated that he did not report the incident because he believed that Connolly would self-report.³⁰⁸ Chief Simpson went even further, stating that not only did he assume that Connolly was going to self-report, Simpson did not believe it was his job to report Connolly.³⁰⁹ Neither Dyson nor Simpson followed up on whether Connolly actually fulfilled his obligation to self-report.³¹⁰ Simpson told DHS OIG that he did not believe he had a duty to report:

Simpson thought that Connolly would have reported the incident to Robert Buster, Special Agent in Charge, PPD, Washington DC, who is Connolly's direct line of supervision. Normally, Dyson would have been responsible to report the incident to Buster, but Dyson did not report the incident because Dyson believed that Connolly would have self-reported the incident. In this instance the notifications should have been reported from Connolly through Buster to Callahan. Simpson did not report the incident to Callahan because it is not Simpson's responsibility to report an incident involving a Special Agent of the USSS. Simpson is responsible to report incidents involving UD Officers to Callahan.³¹¹

The DHS OIG memorandum makes no record of whether Simpson believed he had any responsibility to report to the Office of Integrity. However, Inspector Williams informed Committee staff that he understood referrals to the Office of Integrity to go through the Office of the Chief of the UD:

[U]ltimately on the Uniformed Division side a deputy chief will send that information to the Office of the Chief, and then the Office of the Chief will ultimately send that information to the Office of Integrity. . . . It's sort of like a dual role. [T]he paperwork goes up the chain of command like that, but it will go to the Office of the Chief, and the Office of the Chief will make sure it gets in the hands of the office of integrity.³¹²

For his part, Deputy Chief Dyson offered contradictory testimony in his transcribed interview with Committee staff. He acknowledged his obligation to report the misconduct of others:

- Q. Do you have an obligation to report misconduct when you become aware of?
- A. If I am aware of misconduct, then I have an obligation to report it.³¹³

Yet he also emphasized the obligation of individuals to self-report:

- Q. So, just to make sure we're clear, at the Secret Service, all employees have a general obligation to report misconduct; is that correct?
- A. Yes. But—
- Q. Okay.

³¹¹ Office of Inspector Gen., Dep't of Homeland Sec., Memorandum of Activity, "Personal Interview – Kevin Simpson, Chief, USSS, UD, WHB," Case I15-USSS-SID-06777, at 2 [hereinafter DHS OIG Simpson MOA].

³¹² Williams Tr., supra note 303, at 47-48.

³¹³ Dyson Tr., supra note 302, at 106.

A. —there’s also an expectation that the individual involved will self-report.³¹⁴

In the case of special agents, Dyson seemed to believe that USSS could rely on the obligation to self-report:

Q. If anyone . . . on the special agents’ side had committed misconduct that you observed, would you rely on them to report that misconduct up their chain of command, or would you have an independent obligation to report it yourself?

A. Well, if I have a discussion with the individual and, after the discussion I’m led to believe you’re going to make the notification, I would not make the notification.³¹⁵

However, he also referenced the fact that Connolly was a supervisor as one of the factors that led him to believe self-reporting was sufficient:

[W]ith Marc Connolly being a SES GS-15, the number two person on the President’s detail, there was no reason for me to believe he wouldn’t self-report this, especially after he and I discussed it, and I made sure he knew that he should report it.³¹⁶

Although Dyson had only been Deputy Chief and a colleague of Connolly’s for a short four and a half weeks, he took it for granted that Connolly would self-report: “There was nothing about Marc Connolly that I knew of in my short time knowing him that indicated that he would not self-report this to SAIC Buster.”³¹⁷ In fact, Dyson stated this expectation went for all managers: “We all have and there’s this expectation that especially us, as managers, will self-report. I really viewed this as another one of those cases where the individual would self-report.”³¹⁸

The DHS OIG report concluded both Dyson and UD Chief Kevin Simpson “could have reported the incident.”³¹⁹ Yet the report failed to note that under USSS’s Table of Penalties, all supervisors have an obligation to report misconduct in Offense Code 5.6, dereliction of supervisory responsibility. This obligation is discussed in greater detail in the Failure to Report Misconduct section later in this report.³²⁰

Whether Dyson allowed Connolly to self-report because of Connolly’s status as a fellow supervisor in the chain of command or as a special agent is unclear. However, it is clear it is not sufficient to rely on individuals to report their own misconduct. Not only did the misconduct not get reported up the chain in this instance, but in general, relying on someone to self-report because they are a fellow supervisor may send the message to rank-and-file USSS personnel that supervisors get preferential treatment and do not have to abide by the same rules.

D. Disparate Treatment

FINDING: The typical process for evaluating whether security clearances should be suspended was not followed for the two senior supervisors directly involved in the March 4, 2015, incident.

Even after USSS leadership became aware of the events of March 4, 2015, and referred the matter to the Inspector General, Connolly and Ogilvie's clearances were not suspended, which was generally inconsistent with this type of misconduct.

USSS's Security Officer at the time, Robin DeProspero-Philpot, told the Committee that in this type of case, an individual's security clearance is normally suspended during an investigation into their conduct. DeProspero-Philpot stated:

[A.] The only case . . . that I don't feel that the process was followed, necessarily—in other words, there was no briefing given by me or my Deputy Assistant Director; I found out the information about the March 4 incident, that I was told that no clearances would be suspended, the two employees would be on administrative leave until an investigation was done.

Q. And you had no input in that decision.

A. No.

Q. But you typically would.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any insight as to why this was treated differently?

A. No, I didn't—no.

Q. You didn't ask questions?

A. I did not ask questions.

Q. Who told you that this would be different?

A. As I recall . . . I think it was my Deputy Assistant Director, Pete McCauley.³²¹

DeProspero-Philpot said that, had the normal process been followed, she would have suspended the clearances of Ogilvie and Connolly pending additional investigation.³²²

E. Lack of Candor with Committee Staff

FINDING: Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson may not have been candid with Committee staff.

Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson was one of the UD supervisors who chose not to report the misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility. In the Committee’s interview of Dyson, he used the phrase “don’t recall” eighty-eight times.³²³ Some of his responses raised questions about whether he was being candid with Committee staff. For example, Dyson claimed that he didn’t know the vehicle made contact with any barrier:

Q. Now, in addition to looking at security camera footage related to the suspicious package incident itself on March 4, 2015, did you ever review any security camera footage related to Agents Connolly and Ogilvie’s attempted entrance at the White House complex on the night of March 4, 2015 at all?

A. I did. I saw a video. And this was very short, but it showed the vehicle pulling up at the orange barrier. I may have even seen the vehicle nudge the barrier. But that would have been sometime long after things had really kind of blown up and it was all over the media. And I don’t remember when. But it certainly wasn’t within the first several days because that wasn’t a topic of discussion. I didn’t know any of that happened.

I certainly don’t recall any knowledge of Ogilvie driving and hitting a barrier. If I did, then when Rich Coughlin called me on the 9th and said that someone hit a gate in the drunk driving thing, I would have cleared it up. No, Rich, they moved the barrier. I would have said some sort of follow-up as relates to what the vehicle struck or moved or pushed or whatever. But I completely dismissed it to Rich when he called because, as far as I knew, none of that happened.³²⁴

However, in his interview with DHS OIG, Dyson said that Connolly told Dyson in a phone call that they drove around a road block.³²⁵ According to the DHS OIG report, Dyson called Connolly at 11:19 p.m., just over twenty minutes after Connolly and Ogilvie went through the entrance to the White House complex at South Park 15.³²⁶ Within minutes of that call, Dyson received a forwarded email from the JOC describing a vehicle entering SP15 and moving an orange barrel.³²⁷ Dyson in turn sent that e-mail to both SAIC Buster and Connolly.³²⁸

³²⁸ Email from Alfonso Dyson, Deputy Chief, Uniformed Div., U.S. Secret Service, to Robert Buster, Special Agent in Charge, Presidential Protective Div., U.S. Secret Service, and Marc Connolly, Deputy Special Agent in Charge, Presidential Protective Div., U.S. Secret Service (Mar. 4, 2015, 11:46 p.m.).

When asked whether he received any such emails, Dyson claimed he believed the email referred to the female driver who left the suspicious package:

Q. Did you receive any emails regarding DSAIC Connolly's presence at the White House complex?

A. I can't recall a specific email saying that DSAIC Connolly was there. I don't recall seeing any emails that night, but I also don't recall even checking my emails that late at night.³²⁹

Q. So, in the course of that night, did you ever have an understanding that DSAIC Connolly's vehicle, the vehicle in which we now know he was not the driver, but as you understood it that night, did you have any understanding that the vehicle had moved a barrel near the package?

A. I don't think anyone told me that, but there was an email that came out stating that, but I don't even think I saw that email until the next day sometime. I don't recall checking my emails that night, from the timeframe of the package. I remember a bunch of phone calls and falling asleep, getting up and going to work the next morning. And I think – I'm not 100 percent, but I think that's when I saw that email about the vehicle.

Q. Who was the email from?

A. I believe the email was from [Watch Commander] Mike Braun. It might have been from Keith Williams, but I believe it was from Mike Braun to Keith Williams and myself.

Q. So what was your reaction when you received that email?

A. I think my initial reaction—and again, I'm trying to recall from a couple months ago—was that . . . the email referenced a vehicle moving the barricade or a barrier, but . . . the email didn't specify that it was DSAIC Connolly. And if I recall correctly, I think I believed it was the individual's car or the individual who actually left the package or something. I don't think my mindset was that it was DSAIC Connolly's car.³³⁰

³³⁰ Id. at 98-99.

Yet Deputy Chief Dyson received the email shortly after Inspector Williams notified him of the concerns about DSAIC Connolly and ATSAIC Ogilvie’s vehicle and Connolly himself provided information about driving around a road block. Additionally, though Dyson stated he did not “recall seeing any emails that night,” he in fact forwarded the e-mail on to both SAIC Buster and Connolly. As a result, it is difficult to trust Dyson’s claim that he was not aware the email forwarded by the Watch Commander, Captain Michael Braun, was about the vehicle containing Connolly and Ogilvie.

F. Discipline for Those Involved

i. Individuals Named in OIG Report

FINDING: USSS initially did not discipline Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson after the Inspector General found he did not report the incident.

The day before DHS OIG publicly released its report, DSAIC Marc Connolly reportedly notified USSS leadership that he planned to retire.³³¹ As a result, USSS did not consider disciplinary measures for Connolly.³³²

ATSAIC George Ogilvie received a demotion from his position as a GS-14 supervisory special agent to a GS-13.³³³ He also received a thirty-day suspension and a transfer out of USSS’s Washington (D.C.) Field Office.³³⁴

UD Chief Kevin Simpson received a 5-day suspension for Offense Code 5.6, dereliction of supervisory responsibility, in USSS’s Table of Penalties.³³⁵ According to Clancy, on March 12, Simpson told Clancy that he had not been aware of the allegation of Connolly and Ogilvie drinking.³³⁶ However, Simpson acknowledged in his interview with DHS OIG that Dyson reported to Simpson information reported up the chain from Captain Braun that Connolly had a smell of alcohol on his breath.³³⁷

Deputy Chief Alfonso Dyson initially received no proposed discipline despite DHS OIG’s finding that Dyson could have reported the incident but failed to do so.³³⁸

Four other employees received a letter of reprimand or memorandum of counseling, including ATSAIC Kimberly Tello, Captain Michael Braun, and Lieutenant Charles Miller.³³⁹ A letter of reprimand constitutes formal discipline and stays in an employee’s file for three years, even if the employee is reassigned to another office; a memorandum of counseling does not constitute formal discipline, but is written up by an employee’s supervisor and kept by the supervisor for one year or until the employee is reassigned to another office.³⁴⁰

ii. Individuals Not Named in OIG Report

FINDING: DHS OIG did not investigate whether other USSS employees violated the “10-hour rule” that prohibits consuming alcohol and reporting for duty.

The conduct of other individuals was not investigated as part of the DHS OIG review of the March 4 incident. When Inspector General John Roth appeared before the Committee in a May 14 hearing on the DHS OIG report, he testified: “We interviewed some of the individuals who were at the sort of farewell party in which alcohol was served. Some of them had alcohol and then, for example, went back to the office to continue to work.”³⁴¹ Roth could not provide an estimate of how many individuals fell into such a category.³⁴² Roth testified that his office “did not really press it” because the DHS policy about not driving after even one drink “was really unknown to the Secret Service” and “[n]o one within the Secret Service understood it.”³⁴³

According to the USSS Standards of Ethical, Professional, & Personal Conduct, a desk reference provided to every USSS employee, employees “may not consume alcohol within 10 hours of reporting for duty.”³⁴⁴ The DHS OIG report mentions the rule in passing and does not state whether Ogilvie, Connolly, or any other USSS employee violated the rule. Inspector General Roth later testified before the Committee that it was unlikely that either Ogilvie or Connolly violated the rule, since the incident at South Park 15 took place just before 11:00 p.m. and their duty hours did not begin until 9:00 a.m. the next day.³⁴⁵

Yet any other agent or officer who went back to work after consuming alcohol—regardless of whether or not they traveled in a government-owned vehicle, which Roth focused on—would have violated the 10-hour rule. DHS OIG did not follow up on this issue in its investigation. When asked whether others might have violated the rule Roth pivoted back to Ogilvie and Connolly,³⁴⁶ even though he testified a short while later that other employees told DHS OIG they “would have a beer and a sandwich, say good-bye, and then go back to work.”³⁴⁷

Altogether, DHS OIG interviewed five of the approximately thirty to forty USSS personnel who attended Donovan's retirement party.³⁴⁸

DHS OIG also did not pursue the issue of whether it was appropriate to drive a government-owned vehicle to a retirement function regardless of whether alcohol was consumed. Clancy told DHS OIG in his interview that he believed USSS personnel could use their government-owned vehicles to attend social functions.³⁴⁹ However, at least two USSS employees told DHS OIG that just one month before the March 4 incident, they received ethics training which specifically indicated the inappropriateness of taking a government-owned vehicle to a retirement event.³⁵⁰ USSS personnel may have employed creative means to circumvent this ethics rule; Ogilvie told DHS OIG that he understood that government-owned vehicle driving logs were not to record any mileage other than the drive from home to office or office to home. As a result, Ogilvie's driving log for March 4, 2015, listed no usage of the government-owned vehicle to drive to the retirement party and back to the White House Complex.³⁵¹

G. Summary

The March 4, 2015 incident is significant for several reasons. First, the potential intoxicated driving occurred in the midst of an incident with potentially devastating consequences—a bomb threat at the White House. This is the type of event against which USSS should constantly be vigilant. Second, the incident involved two managers within USSS—one a high-level supervisor with prominence to both special agents and UD officers. Third, and perhaps most importantly, the incident was not initially reported as it might have been for lower-ranking personnel, and the supervisors subsequently appeared to receive preferential treatment during the investigation—both emblematic of the type of inconsistent treatment rank-and-file some USSS employees have alleged is common in USSS and which they say negatively impacts to morale. Combined together, these factors make both the underlying incident and USSS's subsequent handling of it extraordinary troubling, and indicative of serious problems within the agency.

IV. USSS Culture and Accountability for Misconduct

When DHS OIG released its report on the March 4, 2015 incident, it noted that the incident should be viewed in light of “the Secret Service’s reputation for punishing or ignoring those who would further investigate or report such violations.”³⁵² Inspector General John Roth personally raised this issue in his May 14, 2015 testimony before the Committee, where he stated that Watch Commander Braun’s alleged fears were “[c]ertainly consistent with some of the things that we found in the 2013 report with regard to a high percentage of people failing to report misconduct, believing that either nobody would listen, or you would, in fact, be affirmatively retaliated against.”³⁵³

Roth also pointed out that when DHS OIG conducted an electronic survey as part of its December 2013 report, forty-four percent of respondents felt they could not report misconduct without fear of retaliation.³⁵⁴ According to the report:

Employees consistently cited fear of reprisal or retaliation as a reason for not reporting solicitation of prostitution, criminal sexual behavior other than solicitation, excessive alcohol consumption, foreign contacts, or personal conduct. . . . During interviews, supervisors and employees described the USSS as a small and competitive agency, which can make fear of retaliation or alienation an issue.³⁵⁵

Widespread fear of retaliation suggests misconduct may be underreported at USSS and would therefore not be accurately reflected in agency disciplinary data.

According to the results of the 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey, filed between April 27 and June 5, 2015,³⁵⁶ USSS employees increasingly believe they cannot report misconduct without fear of retaliation.³⁵⁷

According to this data, since 2014, less than half of respondents indicated that they could report misconduct without retaliation.³⁵⁸

USSS whistleblowers who provided information to the Committee alleged that there has been a disciplinary double standard that allowed agents and officers who have close relationships with supervisors, including those whose close relationships are the result of being “legacy” employees (relatives of current or former employees), to receive milder discipline for misconduct or to avoid disciplinary action altogether. Some whistleblowers have reported USSS leadership is not consistent when it metes out disciplinary action for misconduct.

It is clear the perception of inconsistency in discipline for misconduct exists. In December 2013, DHS OIG surveyed USSS personnel and found only sixty-one percent of survey respondents were willing to affirmatively state they believed management did not tolerate misconduct.³⁵⁹ Nearly one in five survey respondents—a “noteworthy number,” according to DHS OIG—believed USSS management tolerated misconduct.³⁶⁰ Twenty percent of those were supervisors.³⁶¹ Additionally, nearly twenty-five percent of non-supervisory respondents stated they believed supervisors and senior managers were not held accountable. Even among supervisory respondents, twenty percent believed senior managers are not held accountable for misconduct.³⁶² Overall, only fifty percent of respondents believed senior managers are held accountable, and only fifty-five percent believed supervisors are held accountable.³⁶³

In the wake of the Cartagena scandal, USSS implemented certain changes to its disciplinary procedures by centralizing responsibility for the process in an Office of Integrity and adopting a uniform Table of Penalties. By December 2014, when the Protective Mission Panel released its findings, a year had elapsed since those changes. Yet the Panel found the perception of disparate treatment remained a problem:

The Panel did not review individual past incidents in detail to determine whether appropriate discipline was imposed. It is clear, however, that the rank-and-file—and even very senior current and former members of the Secret Service—do not have confidence that discipline is imposed in a fair and consistent manner. That is a problem for any organization.³⁶⁴

With respect to disciplinary action, perception can be damaging. Morale can be harmed by the perception of a double standard. The Panel added:

In order for the Service’s agents and officers to meet its high standards, they must see that the organization believes in its standards and enforces them in a consistent, evenhanded manner. . . . Accountability creates the culture of performance that the Secret Service needs to meet its zero-failure mission.³⁶⁵

Unlike the Protective Mission Panel, the Committee reviewed past incidents in detail, and has concerns that discipline may have been imposed inconsistently. Such findings could suggest deep-rooted issues. Current DHS Inspector John Roth stated at the May 14, 2015 Committee hearing: “[G]iven the nature of what it is that we’ve seen since [2013], I believe that there is a serious problem within the Secret Service.”³⁶⁶

1. Protection of Communications

FINDING: USSS utilized non-disclosure agreements that do not comply with whistleblower protections.

The Whistleblower Protection Enhancement Act of 2012³⁶⁷ and a similar longstanding appropriations rider³⁶⁸ both require that all non-disclosure agreements include precise language, which states that the agreement does not supersede employee rights relating to communications to Congress, reporting to an Inspector General, or any other whistleblower protection.³⁶⁹ It is a prohibited personnel action to implement or enforce any non-disclosure policy, form, or agreement that does not contain this precise language.³⁷⁰

The Committee found that in the course of conducting an internal investigation, USSS’s Inspection Division administered a non-disclosure form that did not contain the required language. On November 17, 2015, the Committee wrote USSS asking that USSS immediately replace non-disclosure forms that did not comply with the Whistleblower Protection Enhancement Act.³⁷¹

2. USSS Disciplinary Structure and Procedures

A. Former Disciplinary System

Prior to changes in recent years, the disciplinary process at USSS headquarters essentially had two prongs. Where allegations of internal misconduct required investigation, those were conducted by the Inspection Division, over the years a component of its own Office of Inspection, the Office of Investigations, and eventually the Office of Professional Responsibility. The Inspection Division provided its findings to the Employee Relations Branch (ERB), located within the Personnel Division of the Office of Human Resources and Training, to make recommendations for disciplinary action. USSS policy required supervisors and managers contemplating disciplinary and adverse actions to contact ERB for guidance even when the Inspection Division did not conduct an investigation.³⁷² USSS gave the supervisor discretion to determine the ultimate discipline as the deciding official. As a USSS official described to the Committee, this resulted in supervisors meting out punishments slightly less severe than those previously doled out by other supervisors, resulting in a downward trend of severity of discipline.³⁷³ Once the penalty was decided, ERB prepared the relevant materials for personnel actions, such as preparing letters of reprimand or notices of proposal and decision.³⁷⁴ Despite the fact that USSS's Office of Chief Counsel (OCC) did not have access to the files on past instances of misconduct,³⁷⁵ OCC provided guidance to the USSS parties involved at each stage of the process, including both ERB as well as the supervisor making the determination of discipline.³⁷⁶

In February 2001, the Treasury Department Office of Inspector General released an integrity oversight review of USSS's disciplinary process.³⁷⁷ Among other findings, the report found USSS was unable to track how misconduct allegations were handled USSS-wide because it had no centralized tracking or reporting system for such allegations.³⁷⁸ As a result, misconduct allegations might never make it to the Inspection Division; misconduct reporting occurred at the discretion of the Assistant Director's office to which the employee was assigned.³⁷⁹

Even when misconduct was investigated by the Inspection Division, and thus discipline was under the direction of USSS headquarters officials, the report concluded: “[I]n several cases, discipline administered was not consistent with penalties imposed for similar instances of misconduct.”³⁸⁰

In its response to the weaknesses identified in the Treasury OIG report, USSS indicated it would establish a disciplinary review board to ensure “equitable treatment of offenses” and provide a “central repository for ethical, legal, and policy offenses.”³⁸¹ Despite what USSS told OIG in 2001, USSS did not establish such a board until January 31, 2014, after the Cartagena scandal sparked a host of reforms to the disciplinary process.³⁸²

B. Changes to Disciplinary System

In the wake of the 2012 Cartagena scandal, USSS’s disciplinary process received significant attention. In May 2012, USSS established a Professionalism Reinforcement Working Group (PRWG), a panel of five government executives co-chaired by former Director John Berry of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) and Director Connie Patrick of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC).³⁸³ The PRWG was supported by approximately seventy subject matter experts from OPM, FLETC, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the military, and USSS.³⁸⁴

After eight months of review, the PRWG made seventeen recommendations. One of the recommendations stated:

The USSS should consider implementing a cross-agency disciplinary review panel on which supervisors and managers will serve on a rotating basis. This has the advantages of creating a transparent process, exposing many agency personnel to the process, and removing the burden from the direct supervisor to apply discipline.³⁸⁵

On February 7, 2013, USSS released a “Strategic Action Plan to Reinforce Professionalism” that consolidated the recommendations into twelve objectives it intended to pursue. The objective related to the two recommendations above, Objective 7, was titled “Foster transparency in the discipline process and encourage the reporting of misconduct by employees.” It outlined changes USSS intended to implement to its structure for imposing discipline.³⁸⁶

On November 15, 2013, USSS released its new Table of Penalties, providing recommended standards of discipline for a wide variety of categories of misconduct, including under mitigated and aggravated circumstances.³⁸⁷ USSS's table is particularly similar to the table of penalties of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.³⁸⁸ USSS said that it used the FBI's table as a model, then "incorporate[d] the mission" of USSS in order to make modifications.³⁸⁹ Both agencies recommend the same discipline for many categories of misconduct, such as recommending a standard penalty of forty-five days for "DUI/DWI – Government Vehicle."³⁹⁰ For some categories of misconduct, USSS recommends stronger discipline than the FBI. For example, "Loss of Weapon" has a penalty of three days in the FBI table and ten days in the USSS table.³⁹¹

USSS, however, also recommends weaker discipline for other categories. For example, "Violation of Ethical Guidelines" has a standard penalty of fourteen days in the FBI table, but only a penalty of five days in the USSS table.³⁹² "DUI/DWI – Privately Owned Vehicle" has a penalty of thirty days in the FBI table, while USSS breaks its table down into fourteen days for a law enforcement officer and seven days for non-law enforcement personnel.³⁹³

In response to findings from the 2013 DHS OIG misconduct report,³⁹⁴ USSS implemented a policy regarding when directorates can conduct their own fact-finding investigations.³⁹⁵ The policy was implemented the same week USSS released the Table of Penalties. Under the new policy, directorates are authorized to conduct their own fact-finding investigations for:

- Tardiness (non-habitual);
- Absence without leave (less than one workday);
- Minor violations of the appearance policy;
- Performance issues (minor issues that do not affect the mission);
- Discourtesy or disruptive behavior (minor, non-habitual);
- Failure to follow instructions or leave policies (minor, non-habitual);

Directorates may also conduct their own fact-finding investigation if a letter of reprimand is within the mitigated penalty range for the misconduct in question and the Inspection Division gives the directorate permission.³⁹⁷

In December 2013, USSS created a new Office of Integrity, overseen by a Chief Integrity Officer who reports to the Office of the Deputy Director. The next month, in January 2014, the new misconduct and disciplinary procedures went into effect. Under the new procedures, when USSS receives allegations of misconduct, the Inspection Division convenes and chairs an “Intake Group” to review the allegations and determine whether further investigation is warranted.³⁹⁸ If further investigation is warranted, the Intake Group refers the matter back to the Inspection Division and also notifies the Office of Integrity.³⁹⁹

The Office of Integrity took over disciplinary responsibilities from ERB, becoming responsible for preparing and issuing materials related to personnel actions, such as letters of reprimand and notices of proposal and decision.⁴⁰⁰ OCC retained responsibility for “[p]roviding legal advice, consultation, drafting and review, in regard to all disciplinary and adverse actions, grievance, appeals, and reviews.”⁴⁰¹

C. Transparency in Disciplinary Process

A second PRWG recommendation stated:

To the extent consistent with law, the USSS should inform all employees of acts of misconduct by agents and officers and the disciplinary consequences of this misconduct in a way that does not identify the affected employees but reinforces the consequences of misconduct violations. Additionally, senior leadership should have regular communications with agents and officers promoting a transparent culture where reporting misconduct is expected.⁴⁰²

⁴⁰² Recommendations of the Professionalism Reinforcement Working Group (2012).

In its December 2013 report, OIG noted concerns USSS leadership expressed with regard to the recommendation, but DHS OIG nevertheless supported the PRWG recommendation:

USSS senior leadership stated that USSS has the challenge of balancing the workforce's apparent need to know disciplinary outcomes with privacy concerns, especially given the small size of the agency relative to other law enforcement agencies such as FBI. Our survey showed that some employees perceive that USSS tolerates misconduct, does not hold employees accountable, and does not take appropriate action against supervisors and senior managers. These announcements would aid USSS' credibility in responding to reported misconduct and remind the workforce of the consequences of engaging in misconduct.⁴⁰³

USSS finally issued the first such executive summary of misconduct in September 2015, nearly three years after the PRWG's recommendation on this issue.⁴⁰⁴ However, the report does not contain any correlation between the offense committed and the discipline administered. The Director and other leadership received a more detailed report of the misconduct.⁴⁰⁵

3. Security Clearance Revocation Process

FINDING: The independence of DHS's Security Appeals Board may be called into question when adjudicating USSS clearance revocation decisions because the Board is composed of three members from USSS.

Although USSS procedures require the Security Clearance Division to be represented on the Intake Group convened by the Office of Professional Responsibility, the security clearance revocation process is separate and distinct from the formal disciplinary process which follows after the Inspection Division refers its findings to the Office of Integrity. Nevertheless, USSS generally prefers to resolve security concerns before considering disciplinary action.⁴⁰⁶ From fiscal years 2011 through 2013, USSS was among the three components with the highest number of security clearance revocations within DHS.⁴⁰⁷

Given this fact, it is important that the revocation process have appropriate checks and balances. Just as with the formal disciplinary process, some USSS employees have accused USSS of utilizing the revocation process inconsistently. All USSS employees should be able to receive a fair hearing and receive due process in revocation matters.

⁴⁰⁷ U.S. Gov't Accountability Office, Personnel Security Clearances: Additional Guidance and Oversight Needed at DHS and DOD to Ensure Consistent Application of Revocation Process, GAO-14-640 (Sept. 2013), at 4.

According to the DHS handbook on its Personnel Suitability and Security Program, clearance revocations function as follows: if a USSS employee chooses to appeal an initial Notice of Determination revoking a security clearance, the decision goes to a Second-Level Deciding Authority, who completes a Notice of Review to reverse or uphold the Notice of Determination. If the Notice of Review upholds the Notice of Determination, the employee has the right to appeal to a three-person Security Appeals Board (“Board”) within fifteen days.⁴⁰⁸ All three Board members, however, are USSS personnel, because USSS staffs the Board for DHS.⁴⁰⁹ Unlike employees in other DHS component agencies, it is impossible for USSS personnel to have their appeal heard by individuals outside the agency. This leaves the Security Appeals Board vulnerable to criticisms that it lacks independence, both in perception and fact.

As one footnote from a September 2014 report issued by the Government Accountability Office stated:

All members of the board over the last 10 years have been Secret Service employees and thus were involved with the appeals cases of Secret Service employees. Nearly 30 percent (15 of 50) of the DHS cases that went to the appeals board from fiscal years 2011 through 2013 involved Secret Service employees, which could result in employees facing a board that might not be independent.⁴¹⁰

Guidance dating back to the earliest days of the Department, known as “DHS Management Directive 11048,” required Board members to be USSS officials.⁴¹¹ USSS’s Chief Counsel Donna Cahill told the Committee that USSS’s role in appointing the members of the Board was a holdover from an interim measure taken when DHS was established, and USSS believed DHS needed to finalize a more formal process.⁴¹² DHS seems to have at least initiated such a process. In June 2009 DHS issued new guidance, DHS Instruction 121-01-007 Revision # 00, which requires the Board be appointed by a Secretary or a designee.⁴¹³ The December 2013 OIG report found “appointments to the Board and the composition of the Board have not been made in accordance with [that] policy.”⁴¹⁴

According to the 2013 DHS OIG report on misconduct: “USSS officials have expressed interest in relocating the Board from the Department-level and including members who are not from USSS.”⁴¹⁵ Specifically, one senior official at USSS told DHS OIG that moving the Board out of USSS “would increase the appearance of fairness and due process” for those who appeal revocations.⁴¹⁶ The Committee found no evidence USSS is working to make this a reality.

In practice, nothing has changed since the 2013 OIG report; nearly two years later, the Board is still composed entirely of USSS employees.⁴¹⁷ The DHS OIG report recommended USSS “[i]nform the Secretary, or the Secretary’s designee, when vacancies on the Board occur”⁴¹⁸ According to the 2013 report, USSS agreed to do just that.⁴¹⁹ After DHS OIG notified USSS of the problem and was in the final stages of finalizing its report and findings, USSS even pointed to a resulting November 25, 2013, memo issued by Director Pierson which referenced the issue.⁴²⁰ Yet there was in fact a vacancy on the Board when the Chief Human Capital Officer, Thomas Dougherty, left the Board in mid-2014.⁴²¹ He was simply replaced on the Board by the next Chief Human Capital Officer.⁴²²

The Committee believes USSS should be more proactive in pushing DHS to appoint non-USSS employees to the Board. It is important USSS make these changes immediately to create a truly independent body to hear appeals from USSS employees.

RECOMMENDATION: DHS should promptly ensure the Security Appeals Board consists of employees from multiple different agencies.

4. Response to Misconduct

Notwithstanding the changes USSS made to its disciplinary system in recent years, further changes are needed. The Protective Mission Panel found “organizationally, neither the previous, decentralized system nor the new Office of Integrity is perceived as holding the agency to its highest values.”⁴²³ The Panel recommended USSS “[i]mplement a disciplinary system in a consistent manner that demonstrates zero tolerance for failures that are incompatible with its zero-failure mission.”⁴²⁴ Necessary changes to USSS’s response to misconduct are discussed below.

A. Failure to Report Misconduct

FINDING: USSS managers and supervisors do not always report misconduct.

USSS employees are expected, but not required, by USSS policy to report misconduct involving fellow employees. However, managers and supervisors are. On the first page of the USSS Table of Penalties, the introduction states:

Employees are encouraged and expected to report through their chain of command, or the Inspection Division Hotline, or the DHS Office of the Inspector General hotline, information that indicates another employee may have engaged in misconduct described in the Table of Penalties. Supervisors are required to report through their chain of command an employee's misconduct involving violations set forth in the Table of Penalties. Failure of a supervisor to report information required by this policy may result in disciplinary action. See Offense Code 5.6.⁴²⁵

This message is mirrored in the training materials USSS employees receive from USSS's Office of Integrity, which emphasizes the word "REQUIRED."⁴²⁶

- Supervisors: REQUIRED to report through chain of command an employee's misconduct as described in the Table.

The Table of Penalties itself does not include a penalty for employees who fail to report fellow employees; there are only penalties for an employee's failure to report information about

The March 4, 2015 incident, where top-level supervisors aware of potential misconduct relied on an individual to self-report rather than independently notifying the Inspection Division of the incident, showed continued problems with reporting persist notwithstanding the creation of the Office of Integrity and the Intake Group.⁴²⁹ Supervisors and managers at USSS should not rely on an individual’s commitment to “self-report.” Allowing fellow supervisors or managers to self-report misconduct may reinforce a perception among the rank-and-file that such individuals consider themselves above the rules.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS must develop alternatives to self-reporting and hold managers and supervisors accountable in cases where they fail to report misconduct promptly.

B. Conducting an Investigation before Reporting

FINDING: At times USSS supervisors lacked clarity about when to report possible misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility.

There is great potential for the disciplinary process to be undermined when supervisors conduct their own investigations.

In conjunction with the creation of the Office of Integrity, new guidelines adopted in December 2014 outline the responsibility of all USSS employees:

1. Report promptly and directly to the Department's Office of the Inspector General or to the Office of Professional Responsibility, U. S. Secret Service, any knowledge, information, or allegations coming to your attention which indicates that any employee or former employee may have:
 - committed a criminal act, . . . or
 - violated any provision of applicable Standards of Conduct or any rule of conduct issued by an office or bureau, or
 - violated any provision of the merit system, or
 - committed any other misconduct, other than minor misconduct ordinarily addressed by management.
2. If in doubt as to whether circumstances warrant referral of a matter to the Inspector General or the Office of Professional Responsibility, contact the Office of the Inspector General or the Office of Professional Responsibility for a decision.⁴³⁰

The procedures clearly indicate that even allegations coming to an individual's attention should be reported to the Office of Professional Responsibility.

Notwithstanding these new guidelines, as highlighted above in the March 4 case study, USSS supervisors could not definitively say whether it was the role of supervisors to establish misconduct had occurred before referring matters to the Office of Professional Responsibility for investigation.⁴³¹ Their lack of clarity on this issue suggests that USSS has not adequately implemented its new procedures requiring prompt referral.

RECOMMENDATION: Supervisors should receive formal training on the new guidelines for promptly referring allegations of possible misconduct to the Office of Professional Responsibility.

C. Referring Appropriate Misconduct to OIG

FINDING: At times USSS managers have failed to follow DHS procedures for referring certain types of misconduct to the inspector general.

The Committee reviewed dozens of cases in which the MOU and the DHS management directive applied and found that USSS generally referred them to DHS OIG in most cases. However, the Committee also found some cases where the documents do not indicate whether there was a referral, and several cases which raised questions regarding USSS's compliance with the MOU, which are discussed below.

Inspectors general can serve as neutral fact-finders in matters where there may be a conflict of interest within an agency, especially in cases where the alleged misconduct is very serious or when there are high-level agency officials involved. When USSS conducts its own investigations into these types of matters, instead of turning them over to DHS OIG, it has the potential to undermine the disciplinary process and send a message that USSS believes it does not have to answer to independent oversight. Handling such matters "in-house" similarly has the potential to undermine the culture of accountability the Protective Mission Panel stated was so necessary.

In December 2003, USSS signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with DHS OIG which delineates which types of matters need to be referred to DHS OIG when USSS receives an allegation of misconduct. Those matters include:

- All allegations of criminal misconduct against a USSS employee.
- All allegations of misconduct against employees at the GS-15, GM-15 level or higher, or against employees in the USSS Office of Inspection.
- All allegations regarding misuse or improper discharge of a firearm (other than accidental discharge during training, qualifying or practice).
- All allegations of fraud by contractors, grantees or other individuals or entities receiving Department funds or otherwise engaged in the operation of Department programs or operations.⁴³²

The MOU also states:

In addition, the IG will investigate allegations against individuals or entities who do not fit into the categories identified above if the allegations

⁴³² Memorandum of Understanding Between the U.S. Secret Service and the Office of Inspector General, Department of Homeland Security, Dec. 2003, at 1-2 [hereinafter USSS/DHS OIG MOU] [App. at 179-180].

reflect systemic violations, such as abuses of civil rights, civil liberties, or racial and ethnic profiling; serious management problems within the Department, or otherwise represent a serious danger to public health and safety.⁴³³

On June 10, 2004, DHS issued a management directive on policy regarding DHS OIG. The directive reiterated the information outlined above, and also added two additional categories of allegations to be referred to DHS OIG:

- All allegations of serious, noncriminal misconduct against a law enforcement officer. “Serious, noncriminal misconduct” is conduct that, if proved, would constitute perjury or material dishonesty, warrant suspension as discipline for a first offense, or result in loss of law enforcement authority. For purposes of this directive, a “law enforcement officer” is defined as any individual who is authorized to carry a weapon, make arrests, or conduct searches.
- All allegations of visa fraud by DHS employees working in the visa issuance process.⁴³⁴

Both the 2003 MOU and the 2004 DHS management directive contained a version of the following language, which makes clear that for the types of matters outlined above, the Inspection Division does not have the authority to merely conduct an investigation and then produce the results to DHS OIG after the fact:

Such referrals shall be transmitted by the USSS Office of Inspection immediately upon the receipt of adequate information or allegations by the USSS Office of Inspection to reasonably conclude that misconduct may have occurred, and no investigation shall be conducted by the USSS Office of Inspection prior to the referral.⁴³⁵

For all allegations that do not fit the categories above, the 2003 MOU and the 2004 DHS management directive also included a provision for notifying DHS OIG:

With regard to categories of misconduct not specified above, the USSS Office of Inspection should initiate the investigation upon receipt of the allegation, and shall notify within five business days the OIG’s Office of Investigations of such allegation. The OIG shall notify the USSS Office of Inspection if the OIG intends to assume control over or become involved in such an investigation, but absent such notification, the USSS Office of Inspection shall maintain full responsibility for these investigations.⁴³⁶

Despite the MOU and the DHS management directive, the Committee found several cases which raised questions regarding USSS's compliance with the MOU.

In May 2011, a custodian in the Orlando Field Office alleged the Special Agent in Charge (SAIC) had sexually harassed and had unwanted physical contact with her.⁴³⁷ As a GS-15, any allegation involving the SAIC should have been immediately referred to DHS OIG as per the MOU and management directive. Instead, the Inspection Division conducted its own investigation, interviewing twenty-three USSS employees, three custodial employees, and two local law enforcement officers.⁴³⁸ USSS's entire file on the incident makes no mention of DHS OIG. In some cases such as these, allegations are referred to DHS OIG and referred back to USSS for investigation. It is not clear whether that happened in this case. The SAIC retired from USSS in December 2011.

The initial allegations of misconduct in Cartagena in April 2012 did not necessarily constitute alleged criminal misconduct, given that prostitution is legal in Colombia; they also did not involve employees at GS-15 level or higher. Accordingly, DHS OIG claimed in a January 2013 report that USSS followed the MOU and DHS management directive.⁴³⁹ The subsequent DHS OIG report stated that DHS OIG "received reports that USSS officials continued to proceed with their investigative activities into the Cartagena incident, despite having been advised by DHS OIG on several occasions to cease their investigative activities, in order to enable to OIG to conduct an independent investigation."⁴⁴⁰

Failures to appropriately refer misconduct to DHS OIG continued even after the Cartagena scandal. On June 18, 2013, an Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAIC) on the Presidential Protective Division (PPD), met a woman in a bar at the Hay-Adams Hotel as he had dinner and drinks.⁴⁴¹ At approximately 10:30 p.m., she commented on how much alcohol the ASAIC had consumed, and he suggested that he stay in an extra bed in her hotel room.⁴⁴² In the room, he unloaded his duty weapon, and they slept in separate beds.⁴⁴³ In the middle of the night, he was awakened by the sound of vomiting from the woman, who told him that he needed to leave immediately.⁴⁴⁴ He collected his weapon, but forgot to collect a round of ammunition he had earlier ejected from the weapon's chamber.⁴⁴⁵ He realized his mistake once he arrived in the

Hay-Adams lobby, and asked a hotel security officer if he could return to a guest's hotel room to retrieve a "money clip" that he left behind.⁴⁴⁶ However, the security officer would not permit him to return to the room, since he was not a registered guest and did not have a key.⁴⁴⁷ When the hotel security officer ultimately went up to the room himself, the ASAIC got nervous and left the hotel without the round of ammunition, driving himself home.⁴⁴⁸ The ASAIC briefed the Inspection Division on the incident in July 2013,⁴⁴⁹ and PPD SAIC Buster issued a letter of reprimand on July 31, 2013.⁴⁵⁰ The ASAIC was a GS-15 employee, and the incident should have been reported to DHS OIG immediately per the MOU. It was not until November 4, 2013, that USSS reported the incident to DHS OIG,⁴⁵¹ after the Washington Post made an inquiry about the incident in October 2013.⁴⁵²

In the summer of 2013, the USSS Inspection Division became aware of allegations against the Deputy Assistant Director in the Office of Investigations. As a Deputy Assistant Director, he was a member of the Senior Executive Service. The allegations concerned conduct that allegedly took place sometime in 2012 or prior, when he was the SAIC of the San Antonio Field Office.⁴⁵³ As a GS-15, any allegation involving the SAIC should have been immediately referred to DHS OIG per the MOU and management directive. Instead, the Inspection Division conducted its own investigation and determined that the allegations of improper conduct against the Deputy Assistant Director were unfounded.⁴⁵⁴ Only after the Inspection Division had completed its investigation did it refer the incident to DHS OIG.⁴⁵⁵ However, DHS OIG only performs a fact-finding role, upon completion of which disciplinary action is always performed by the agency itself. This raises concerns that DHS OIG may not spend resources duplicating an investigation already conducted, and not having conducted any investigation, would not be in a position to question the conclusions of USSS's investigation.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS Office of Inspection should refer misconduct covered by the MOU to DHS OIG immediately upon receiving adequate information to reasonably conclude that misconduct may have occurred.

D. Failure to Discipline

i. Employees Who Provide Inaccurate Information

FINDING: USSS leadership has at times failed to charge USSS personnel with “providing inaccurate information” or “lack of candor.”

The USSS Table of Penalties includes six separate charges aimed at honesty. Four cover false or misleading information with regards to employment or security documents,⁴⁵⁶ fiscal matters,⁴⁵⁷ investigative activity,⁴⁵⁸ and other official matters.⁴⁵⁹ Each of these carries a standard penalty of fourteen days suspension. The Table of Penalties also includes categories for “Lack of Candor – No Oath”⁴⁶⁰ and “Lack of Candor/Lying – Under Oath.”⁴⁶¹ The standard penalty for lack of candor with no oath is seven days of suspension, while the standard penalty for lack of candor under oath is removal.⁴⁶²

Even when it occurs absent an oath, lack of candor is damaging because it can result in Giglio impairment, which affects the employee’s future ability to testify as a witness in a criminal case. DHS OIG noted in its 2013 report on misconduct in USSS:

Ultimately, a “Giglio-impaired” law enforcement officer could be deemed unable to testify as a witness in a criminal case and thus unable to perform a critical element of his or her job. Pursuant to Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972) and Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963), the defense in a Federal criminal case is entitled to any information or evidence that tends to undermine the credibility or truthfulness of a witness. When the United States Attorney’s Office makes a Giglio request, a Federal agency has an affirmative duty to conduct a pretrial examination of each testifying law enforcement officer’s personnel file for any such derogatory information, United States v. Henthorn, 931 F.2d 29 (9th Cir. 1991). Because a lack of candor charge against a Federal law enforcement officer relates to his or her propensity for truthfulness, this material would have to be provided to the United States Attorney’s Office and could potentially undermine the Government’s case.⁴⁶³

⁴⁶³ OIG 2013 Misconduct Report, supra note 39, at 47 n.23.

In an effort to avoid a Giglio impairment, it has been publicly reported that managers at USSS have at times been reluctant to charge USSS employees with providing inaccurate information, even when USSS determined that an employee lied.⁴⁶⁴

The December 2013 DHS OIG report provided an example of this. The case involved a USSS special agent in 2010 traveling in support of a presidential visit.⁴⁶⁵ The agent arrived at the airport four hours late smelling of alcohol and accompanied by local female foreign nationals (FFNs).⁴⁶⁶ ERB recommended a seven-day suspension for three charges: failure to report to duty as scheduled, lack of candor with a USSS supervisor, and conduct unbecoming a USSS special agent.⁴⁶⁷ The employee’s SAIC issued the notice of proposed discipline, and in response, the employee requested that the SAIC remove the lack of candor charge.⁴⁶⁸ The SAIC agreed to grant the request, rescinding the initial proposal and asking ERB to draw up a new suspension proposal without the lack of candor charge.⁴⁶⁹ When ERB asked the SAIC whether or not the charge was supported by the evidence, the SAIC stated that “he did not want to affect the employee’s future ability to testify in criminal cases, and explained that once the employee cleared his head and had time to reflect fully on the events, the employee acted in good faith.”⁴⁷⁰ DHS OIG noted, “It is unclear whether a supervisor is permitted to change the basis of a proposed penalty once it has been issued to the employee.”⁴⁷¹ ERB specialists informed their manager of their concerns with changing the documents, but after discussion with Deputy Assistant Director Jane Murphy were ultimately told to remove the charge.⁴⁷²

Overall, it is difficult to quantify how many times an employee has shown or acted with lack of candor, but has not been charged with this violation. The example above can be documented because of Murphy’s direction that the lack of candor charge be removed. However, there are also other instances where USSS employees identified a lack of candor yet were not disciplined for it. For example, in January 2011, two special agents from the Clinton Protective Division were involved in an accident in the Dominican Republic in a government-rented vehicle.⁴⁷³ One special agent said he consumed a glass of wine and a glass of champagne prior to the accident.⁴⁷⁴ Investigators subsequently learned “[d]etails previously omitted and facts misrepresented” by the special agent. There is no mention in the case file of whether the special agent should have been charged or was disciplined for lack of candor.⁴⁷⁵ In fact, only informal discipline was administered for failure to follow instructions and policy regarding vehicle accidents.⁴⁷⁶ USSS concluded “no conclusive information was developed” to determine the agent “was impaired while operating a government-rented vehicle.”⁴⁷⁷

In April 2013, USSS received allegations against a GS-14 ATSAIC in the Orlando Field Office.⁴⁷⁸ The allegations included the ATSAIC failed to investigate an accident in a government-owned vehicle driven by a special agent who was close with the ATSAIC. The ATSAIC claimed it was because USSS’s Administrative Operations Division (AOD) told him the vehicle would shortly thereafter be surveyed and “it was more beneficial for the government to avoid the cost of an accident investigation for a vehicle that was scheduled to be surveyed in one or two days.”⁴⁷⁹ Investigators found “[d]espite [the] ATSAIC[’s] . . . claim that he contacted AOD and was advised that an accident investigation was unnecessary, there is no record of that conversation, and AOD personnel deny they would have advised him not to complete an investigation.”⁴⁸⁰

Investigators concluded the ATSAIC failed to ensure the accident was properly investigated, but apparently made no formal finding on ATSAIC’s veracity in the matter.⁴⁸¹ Inspectors also found the ATSAIC compelled a suspect to grant consent to search his residence, and induced a special agent to obtain food and beverages from a hotel for the USSS command post and have the hotel charge them as setup fees.⁴⁸² Ultimately, the Office of Integrity proposed a ten-day suspension for the ATSAIC.⁴⁸³ In the end, however, the ATSAIC was only issued a letter of reprimand for “Inappropriate Interactions with a Criminal Suspect and Subordinate.”⁴⁸⁴

A review of discipline imposed from fiscal years 2010 through 2014 shows when USSS does charge lack of candor, it is usually when the agency could impose discipline for other categories of misconduct. For instance, one male special agent was charged in 2012 with “Providing Inaccurate Information in [a] Matter of Official Interest” in conjunction with

“Conduct Unbecoming a Secret Service Employee” for having an inappropriate relationship with Sara Jane Moore, the woman who attempted to assassinate President Gerald Ford, after she was released from prison in 2007.⁴⁸⁵ The agent was specifically assigned to Moore’s case, and had taken her to his son’s wrestling matches on three occasions when he was on duty and assigned to monitor Moore.⁴⁸⁶ Similarly, he brought Moore to his home for a Labor Day event at his house that a female special agent from USSS also attended; both agents received scheduled overtime pay as part of an assignment to monitor Moore that day in connection with a protective visit.⁴⁸⁷ The special agent, who was marrying the female special agent, invited Moore to their wedding,⁴⁸⁸ according to the agent, when he informed his ATSAIC of the idea, the ATSAIC asked to be seated next to Moore and joked, “At least we will know where she is.”⁴⁸⁹ The agent charged with “Providing Inaccurate Information” received a thirty-day suspension,⁴⁹⁰ however, the ATSAIC, who was aware of the wedding invitation but did not inform other supervisors,⁴⁹¹ was apparently not charged with Dereliction of Supervisory Responsibility for failure to report the special agent’s relationship or wedding invitation.⁴⁹²

Of thirteen examples where inaccurate information or a lack of candor played a role in the discipline imposed, ten were accompanied by another violation.⁴⁹³ In two instances, a charge of lack of candor or providing inaccurate information was not accompanied by another violation. In 2010, a probationary special agent provided inaccurate information concerning loss of equipment, which resulted in the agent’s termination during the probationary period.⁴⁹⁴ In a February 2012 incident, a special agent was charged with providing inaccurate information concerning his association with a foreign national, which resulted in the agent resigning in lieu of adverse action.⁴⁹⁵ Both were investigated by the employee’s managers and not by USSS headquarters.⁴⁹⁶

In a third incident, an employee was charged with an offense completely unrelated to false information. In August 2012, a Uniformed Division (UD) officer who provided inaccurate information to a supervisor was disciplined for the generic charge of “Conduct Unbecoming a RECOMMENDATION: USSS should clearly define what constitutes “providing inaccurate information” or “lack of candor” and agency personnel should always be independently charged when merited.

ii. Resigning or Retiring in Lieu of Formal Discipline

FINDING: Some USSS employees have resigned or retired prior to being disciplined for misconduct.

In 2001, the Treasury OIG noted that discipline was not administered in some cases because employees either resigned or retired prior to discipline being administered.⁵⁰⁰ Federal agencies do not have disciplinary authority over individuals who resign their employment. Thus, when USSS employees facing disciplinary action as a penalty for misconduct resign or retire, no formal discipline can be imposed.

USSS told the Committee the agency “evaluates the specific facts and circumstances of each case and considers a number of factors to determine whether a settlement/employment agreement is appropriate and in the best interests of the Agency.”⁵⁰¹ This includes the “likelihood of proving the case”; “a balancing of the time it would take to finally resolve a matter through the discipline and litigation process versus the time it would take to resolve the matter through settlement”; and “whether the employee is willing to accept in settlement a disciplinary or adverse action that is at the same or similar to the action the proposing or deciding official considers appropriate.”⁵⁰² USSS also stated “nothing prevents an employee who is eligible to retire from retiring. Therefore, a retirement-eligible employee may choose to retire before an agency takes disciplinary or adverse action.”⁵⁰³ commuted daily to Pittsburgh from Cleveland in his government-owned vehicle; ultimately, his SAIC found out about the travel and counseled him to stop, but did not discipline him.⁵⁰⁵ A review of the employee's official car files at the beginning of 2012 revealed a discrepancy of 17,739 miles.⁵⁰⁶ In January 2012, the ATSAIC admitted to inspectors that for the prior two years, he had falsified his time and attendance paperwork to reflect work when in fact he "failed to report to the office an average of two to three days a week and on the days he did report, he arrived late and left early."⁵⁰⁷ He also kept at his personal residence approximately $50,000 worth of Carnegie-Mellon University equipment, which he failed to produce for inventory purposes.⁵⁰⁸ On the same day the ATSAIC admitted time and attendance fraud USSS suspended his security clearance, and USSS continued its investigation. Approximately two weeks later on February 13, the ATSAIC informed USSS that he would retire at the end of the month.⁵⁰⁹ USSS did not propose any discipline for him during that time period.

For example, an ATSAIC of USSS was detailed to Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.⁵⁰⁴ For approximately nine months in 2005-2006, the ATSAIC

In May 2010, a USSS employee filed a harassment complaint against an ATSAIC in the New York Field Office, accusing him of unwanted touching and inappropriate comments and gestures, such as grabbing his genitals.⁵¹⁰ After interviews by the Inspection Division identified other allegations of inappropriate behavior, a search of the ATSAIC's computer revealed a sexually-explicit PowerPoint file and photographs depicting nudity.⁵¹¹ In July 2010, USSS suspended the ATSAIC's security clearance.⁵¹² That fall, the ATSAIC's security clearance was revoked and the employee was placed on indefinite suspension.⁵¹³ After the ATSAIC filed an appeal with the Merit Systems Protection Board and USSS's Security Appeals Board, he ultimately reached a settlement agreement with USSS's Office of Chief Counsel in May 2011.⁵¹⁴

As described above, in May 2011, a custodian filed a complaint against a SAIC in USSS's Orlando Field Office. USSS suspended the SAIC's security clearance on May 17, 2011.⁵¹⁵ USSS's subsequent investigation concluded the SAIC "engaged in a pattern of unprofessional conduct,"⁵¹⁶ including unwanted physical contact with a custodian and three USSS employees,⁵¹⁷ "requests to view child pornography,"⁵¹⁸ having "a sexually explicit video file, nude photographs, and other inappropriate material in emails and email attachments,"⁵¹⁹ and unreported relationships with female foreign nationals.⁵²⁰ The SAIC clearly lied to inspectors regarding his inappropriate conduct, denying all of the allegations until confronted with contrary evidence.⁵²¹ Despite this, USSS never issued a notice of proposed discipline. Instead, USSS Chief Counsel Donna Cahill approved an employment agreement with the SAIC on September 12, 2011 which allowed him to remain on leave until he retired at the end of the year.⁵²²

During the Cartagena investigation, DHS OIG received a hotline complaint concerning the individual serving as the head of the Office of Professional Responsibility, Assistant Director George Luczko.⁵²³ DHS OIG told the Committee that it developed evidence to indicate that Luczko misused his government vehicle by giving a ride to a foreign national and meeting another foreign national at a restaurant for unofficial purposes.⁵²⁴ After Acting Inspector General Charles Edwards presented Director Julia Pierson with this information on July 13, 2013,⁵²⁵ Luczko retired from USSS on August 31, 2013, and no disciplinary action was taken.⁵²⁶

In February 2014, an ATSAIC in USSS's Charlotte Field Office was found to have consumed alcohol on duty and participated in unauthorized outside employment.⁵²⁷ The ATSAIC admitted to drinking vodka on duty to cope with anxiety and stated he was under treatment for it.⁵²⁸ USSS suspended his security clearance on March 6, 2014.⁵²⁹ On July 17, 2014, the ATSAIC entered into an employment agreement with USSS's Office of Chief Counsel whereby he remained on accrued leave until he retired earlier this year on April 30, 2015.⁵³⁰

According to statements to the Committee during the transcribed interview of the former chief of USSS's Human Capital Division, when formal discipline is not imposed, there is no permanent record of the employee's misconduct when they seek employment at another federal agency after their separation from USSS.⁵³¹

RECOMMENDATION: Once the fact-finding phase of an investigation is completed, USSS should continue to move swiftly through the disciplinary process.

iii. Need for Appropriate Discipline

FINDING: At times USSS managers have failed to terminate employees promptly when serious misconduct has been substantiated.

The Committee's investigation has identified instances in which managers failed to take appropriate steps to remove employees who have committed serious misconduct. In response, some Committee Members feel that statutory changes are necessary to give USSS the ability to take more swift action in firing employees for substantiated misconduct. Other Members believe that USSS should instead streamline its the process to ensure prompt and appropriate disciplinary action.

In general, federal agencies may take actions to remove employees only for "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service."⁵³² A removal action is an adverse action based upon misconduct, unacceptable performance, or a combination of both. An employee against whom an action is proposed is entitled to: (1) at least thirty days' advance written notice, unless there is reasonable cause to believe the employee has committed a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment may be imposed, stating the specific reasons for the proposed action; (2) a reasonable time, but not less than seven days, to answer orally and in writing and to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the answer; (3) be represented by an attorney or other representative; and (4) a written decision and the specific reasons therefor at the earliest practicable date.⁵³³

Federal agencies may also remove an employee for unacceptable performance, which are performance-based actions.⁵³⁴ These actions must be properly documented and an employee must be provided with an opportunity to improve performance before a removal action can be taken. An employee whose removal is proposed is entitled to: (1) thirty days' advance written notice of the proposed action which identifies the specific instances of unacceptable performance by the employee on which the proposed action is based and the critical elements of the employee's position involved in each instance of unacceptable performance; (2) be represented by an attorney or other representative; (3) a reasonable time to answer orally and in writing; and (4) a written decision that specifies the instances of unacceptable performance and that has been concurred in by an employee at a higher level than the employee who proposed the action.⁵³⁵

Federal employees generally have the right to appeal a removal action to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) or file a grievance under the agency's collective bargaining grievance procedures. Allegations of discrimination, reprisal for whistleblowing, and other prohibited personnel practices can be part of the MSPB appeal process or through the grievance process. Employees can also file such allegations directly with the agency’s Equal Employment Office or with the Office of Special Counsel.

During the 114th Congress, the Committee has held a series of hearings to examine federal employee misconduct.⁵³⁶ Members of the Committee expressed dismay at the misconduct and some questioned whether agency leadership has the tools to adequately detect and punish wrongdoing by employees. Other Committee members noted that better implementation of existing laws could help by streamlining the disciplinary process. While USSS’s firing authority doesn’t materially differ from other agencies, the consequences of problems within the agency are more acutely felt by USSS due to its zero-failure mission.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should review its disciplinary processes to find ways to streamline and make them more efficient and effective.

5. USSS Culture of Misconduct

As noted above, Inspector General John Roth recently testified before the Committee: “[G]iven the nature of what it is that we’ve seen since [2013], I believe that there is a serious problem within the Secret Service.”⁵³⁷ This section examines whether these problems are new, or whether they have been an issue at USSS throughout the past several years.

A. OIG “Culture” Report

As USSS was in the midst of adopting the new Table of Penalties and creating the Office of Integrity, DHS OIG released its December 2013 report on misconduct and disciplinary issues. The 2013 OIG report was quickly dubbed the USSS “culture report” given such headlines as “Long-Awaited Report Largely Clears Secret Service of ‘Culture’ Problem.”⁵³⁸ The word “culture” is actually only used once in the report, to describe the “chain-of-command” tendencies of the Secret Service.⁵³⁹ Nevertheless, a frequently quoted line from the report, which appears in the Executive Summary, states DHS OIG “did not find evidence that misconduct is widespread in USSS.”⁵⁴⁰ Within months, after agents passed out in a hallway from drinking in the Netherlands and crashed a car in the Florida Keys in an incident involving alcohol,⁵⁴¹ the conduct of USSS agents was called into question.⁵⁴²

The DHS OIG report's one-page Executive Summary also stated DHS OIG did not find "any evidence that USSS leadership has fostered an environment that tolerates inappropriate behavior."⁵⁴³ As noted above, at a Committee hearing on May 14, 2015, current Inspector General John Roth was asked by Representative Ron D. DeSantis about these two conclusions in the 2013 report:

DESANTIS: [B]efore your tenure the DHS Office of Inspector General released a 2013 report which did not find evidence in the Secret Service that misconduct or inappropriate behavior is widespread or that leadership has fostered an environment that tolerates inappropriate conduct. So given your tenure, given this report, what are your thoughts about the 2013 DHS report? Is that an accurate reflection of what's going on in the culture of the Secret Service right now?

ROTH: Certainly not right now, it is not, I mean. But one of the things about the report that you reference, the 2013 report, is that there are fascinating findings within it. For example, they did a survey, an electronic survey in which 138 electronic survey respondents personally observed excessive alcohol consumption and 86 percent of them indicated that they did not report such behavior. The report also indicated that of the 2,500-and-some electronic survey respondents, 44 percent of them felt that they could not report misconduct without fear of retaliation if they, in fact, reported that. So within that report itself there are some very, very disturbing trends. And I think, given the nature of what it is that we've seen since then, I believe that there is a serious problem within the Secret Service.⁵⁴⁴

DESANTIS: Is there any indication that the process for discipline within the Secret Service has improved since the 2013 report?

⁵⁴⁴ OGR Hearing on OIG Mar. 4 Report, supra note 36, at 29.

ROTH. Well, it certainly has improved since Cartagena. The Secret Service has taken steps to—they have an Office of Integrity now, for example. That is the one that imposes discipline. As a result of our 2013 inspection, we made a number of different recommendations, including the table of penalties, which they now have adopted. So I think the Secret Service is moving in the right direction in this area after Cartagena.

DESANTIS: It's safe to say . . . that the conclusions reached in the 2013 report, that there's a conflict between the conclusions you reached in your [2015] report.

ROTH: I would agree with that.⁵⁴⁵

The Executive Summary of the 2013 OIG report stated only sixty-one percent of survey respondents believed management did not tolerate misconduct; however, a “noteworthy number” believed USSS management tolerated misconduct, including eighty-nine supervisors.⁵⁴⁶ Twenty percent of supervisory respondents believed senior managers are not held accountable for misconduct.⁵⁴⁷ Overall, only fifty percent of respondents believed senior managers are held accountable, and only fifty-five percent believed supervisors are held accountable.⁵⁴⁸

According to the OIG report, some USSS employees were hesitant to report misconduct. The top reason cited was that employees did not believe USSS management was supportive of employees reporting behavior that could cause a security concern.⁵⁴⁹ Only fifty-five percent of respondents stated that they could report a suspected violation of any law, rule, regulation, or standards of conduct without fear of retaliation.⁵⁵⁰ Further, eighty percent of respondents who personally observed behavior that could cause a security concern to USSS did not report it.⁵⁵¹

B. Alcohol-Related Misconduct

Historically, USSS’s policy on alcohol prohibited “[o]perating or being in actual physical control of [any] owned, leased, or rented passenger motor vehicle . . . while intoxicated or impaired by alcohol or a controlled substance.”⁵⁵² Thus, in the 2011 car accident in the Dominican Republic that involved alcohol, discipline hinged on whether the driver was “intoxicated or impaired.” In response to criticisms at the time of the Cartagena scandal that USSS was too lenient with regard to a wide variety of conduct, the agency quickly adopted stricter standards for several behaviors.⁵⁵³ The new standards, sent to all USSS employees on April 27, 2012, included the so-called “ten-hour rule,” prohibiting the consumption of alcohol within ten hours of reporting for duty.⁵⁵⁴

High-profile violations of the ten-hour rule have attracted public attention. As mentioned above, on March 23, 2014, a special agent on USSS's elite Counter Assault Team supporting a presidential visit to The Hague, Netherlands was found passed out under the influence of alcohol in a hotel hallway.⁵⁵⁵ On March 24, he and two other agents were all sent back to the U.S. for improper conduct involving alcohol.⁵⁵⁶ On March 25, the Washington Post broke the story,⁵⁵⁷ and the next day, USSS made formal notifications to DHS OIG.⁵⁵⁸ One special agent resigned on April 22, 2011, and the other two agents involved were issued 28-day and 30-day suspensions.⁵⁵⁹ One of the individuals involved in the incident acknowledged to inspectors he had previously passed out due to excessive alcohol consumption in April 2011 on his first out-of-town assignment, which was to Chicago.⁵⁶⁰

During the 2014 United Nations General Assembly, one special agent was assigned to work each day at 9:00 a.m., yet stayed out one night drinking until 1:00 a.m.⁵⁶¹ The agent self-reported this information in connection with a misunderstanding regarding whether the agent had been involved in ordering an escort service, which the agent had not.⁵⁶² USSS referred the incident to DHS OIG on October 8, 2014, after the last date the Committee has full information on final disciplinary actions.⁵⁶³

As mentioned above, on March 7, 2014, two UD officer-technicians were involved in a late-night accident while driving a government-rented vehicle in Islamorada, Florida.⁵⁶⁴ Although Florida Highway Patrol responding to the scene detected a slight odor of alcohol emanating from the driver, the officer-technician passed a horizontal gaze nystagmus field sobriety test.⁵⁶⁵ According to USSS files, the UD notified the Inspection Division of the incident on March 19, at which point the Intake Group determined the Inspection Division should investigate.⁵⁶⁶ The subsequent investigation, which included interviewing thirteen employees from various bars and restaurants and other private venues, revealed the driver had misused a government-rented vehicle, and four UD officer-technicians overall had violated USSS's ten-hour rule.⁵⁶⁷ One of the four UD officer-technicians resigned on October 4, 2014, two served 35-day suspensions in late 2014, and one had acknowledged his proposed 21-day suspension as of March 2, 2015.⁵⁶⁸

On the night of November 7, 2014, a special agent from the Washington (D.C.) Field Office was stopped by U.S. Park Police after losing control of his government-owned vehicle on the George Washington Parkway and sliding onto the grass shoulder.⁵⁶⁹ A field sobriety test indicated the agent's blood alcohol level was .136, and the agent admitted he had had four or more drinks at a bar.⁵⁷⁰ Park Police contacted USSS and requested a supervisor respond to the scene; the agent was then released to the USSS supervisor without being criminally charged.⁵⁷¹ On November 10, 2014, USSS's Intake Group determined the Inspection Division should conduct an investigation, but by mid-2015 USSS's file on the incident had not been updated to reflect whether an investigation occurred.⁵⁷²

On December 28, 2014, a GS-15 RAIC of the Lima, Peru Resident Office, was involved in an accident with his government-owned vehicle.⁵⁷³ The RAIC's child was in the car at the time of the accident, a violation of government-owned vehicle policies.⁵⁷⁴ Both local police and Department of State's regional security officer believed alcohol may have been a factor in the accident, as he "refused field sobriety tests and claimed that he is taking medication which causes drowsiness."⁵⁷⁵ According to USSS files, local police "did not arrest RAIC [NAME REDACTED] due to his diplomatic status";⁵⁷⁶ however, they did request the U.S. embassy interview him.⁵⁷⁷ After DHS OIG declined to review the incident, USSS's Intake Group determined that USSS should conduct an investigation.⁵⁷⁸ Meanwhile, USSS temporarily reassigned the RAIC to Washington, D.C. As of mid-2015, there was no indication in USSS's case file that he had received any discipline.

C. Sexual Misconduct

A review of USSS disciplinary files from both before and after the Cartagena incident revealed some instances of sexual misconduct. Such misconduct included solicitation of prostitution, other criminal sexual acts, and other sexual behavior that causes a security concern.

According to USSS’s Adjudicative Desk Reference, sexual behavior is a security concern when it “reflects a lack of judgment or discretion, or subjects the individual to undue influence or coercion, exploitation, or duress.”⁵⁷⁹

A review of USSS records reveals disturbing instances of sexual misconduct. In April 2011, an agent in the Greenville (SC) Resident Office admitted to having sex at the USSS office in March 2010 with a woman who he was investigating for embezzlement.⁵⁸⁰ The woman alleged that the agent had continually encouraged her to “trust” him that she would get a probationary sentence, and thus when he initiated sexual intercourse she cooperated out of fear he would otherwise allow her to be sentenced to prison.⁵⁸¹ The agent denied making such a deal, but failed a polygraph examination when asked if had ever told her he would seek probation for her in exchange for sex.⁵⁸² The agent subsequently resigned from USSS in August 2011, and USSS never proposed any formal discipline.⁵⁸³

In April 2012, USSS investigated allegations that an ASAIC in USSS’s Special Services Division pointed a gun at his wife.⁵⁸⁴ The ASAIC made some admissions to USSS investigators, but then failed a polygraph.⁵⁸⁵ After “express[ing] regret and embarrassment at having lied to inspectors in early interviews,”⁵⁸⁶ in early May 2012 the ASAIC admitted “he had numerous extramarital affairs in the form of one-night stands with eight women from his past and with two additional couples, whom he met through . . . online swinging websites.”⁵⁸⁷ Further, he admitted he had “spit in his wife’s face and at the back of her head; thrown things at her; tossed water in her face twice; and used his hands in at least two instances to simulate a gun and then point it at her during arguments.”⁵⁸⁸ Notwithstanding this information, USSS failed to move forward with disciplinary procedures for the ASAIC; in May 2013, one year after the ASAIC’s admissions, the Office of Chief Counsel advised the Inspection Division that the case “remain[ed] under administrative review.”⁵⁸⁹ The ASAIC finally resigned from USSS in July 2013 without USSS ever proposing any formal discipline.⁵⁹⁰

Overall, in its December 2013 report, DHS OIG stated that it had verified fourteen instances where USSS’s Inspection Division had concluded employees engaged in sexual activity in exchange for money.⁵⁹¹ For example, in Las Vegas in April 2013, police and hotel security responded to a disturbance call from a room at the Quad Hotel Resort and Casino.⁵⁹² A UD officer was in the room with a prostitute and an unknown third individual.⁵⁹³ The police determined that the officer hired a prostitute, exchanged money, and had sexual intercourse with her.⁵⁹⁴ However, later that night, an argument ensued over money and the Las Vegas police responded.⁵⁹⁵ The officer was not arrested or charged by Las Vegas police.⁵⁹⁶ Five days after the incident, USSS placed the officer on administrative leave and suspended his security clearance the next day.⁵⁹⁷ USSS subsequently moved forward with disciplinary procedures by suspending the officer indefinitely without pay.⁵⁹⁸ He resigned in November 2013.⁵⁹⁹

However, DHS OIG's 2013 report also states that electronic and in-person survey respondents do not believe the solicitation of prostitutes is widespread in USSS. Out of 2,575 electronic survey respondents, 207 respondents (eight percent) indicated they were aware of USSS employees engaging in solicitation of prostitutes. Of the 207 respondents, nineteen indicated they personally observed this behavior.⁶⁰⁰ The 2013 report also acknowledged, "Because of how matters are reported to ISP . . . , we were unable to confirm that these instances represent a comprehensive account of all alleged or confirmed activities related to sexual contact in exchange for money."⁶⁰¹ In fact, an electronic survey of USSS employees by DHS OIG found that out of 2,575 respondents, 207 were willing to acknowledge that they were aware of USSS employees engaging in solicitation of prostitutes.⁶⁰² Of those individuals, 46 percent did not believe solicitation of prostitution was isolated, and ten percent believed it was systemic.⁶⁰³ Yet of those who personally observed solicitation of prostitutes, 100 percent admitted that they had not reported the behavior to USSS.⁶⁰⁴

Instances of solicitation for prostitution have continued to come to light since the 2013 DHS OIG report. In June 2014, a member of USSS's APT staff reported as part of his security clearance update investigation that he had been arrested by the D.C. Metropolitan Police Department in October 2011 for solicitation of prostitution.⁶⁰⁵ As of mid-2015, there was no indication in the file that the employee had been disciplined.

V. Management and Leadership

FINDING: USSS leadership needs to continue to reform the agency.

USSS leadership must strengthen its efforts to hold individuals accountable as it reforms the agency. This sentiment has been expressed again and again to the Committee. The Protective Mission Panel also felt strongly about this issue:

Of the many concerns the Panel encountered, the question of leadership is, in our view, the most important. The Panel found an organization starved for leadership that rewards innovation and excellence and demands accountability. From agents to officers to supervisors, we heard a common desire: More resources would help, but what the Secret Service really needs is leadership.⁶⁰⁶

In addition to accounts from USSS personnel, it is clear from quantitative data such as employee separation surveys that USSS employees are disconnected from management.⁶⁰⁷ UD officers and special agents who left the agency in fiscal year 2015 cited “Senior Leadership Commitment to the Mission” as one of the three poorest aspects of the job.⁶⁰⁸ “Better communication between employees and management” and management “demonstrat[ing] an appreciation for the level of work accomplished” were commonly cited as factors that could cause employees to stay at USSS.⁶⁰⁹

While many USSS employees associate leadership deficiencies with USSS’s senior leadership team (the so-called “8th floor” because of the location of the executive offices), Panel member Tom Perrelli testified at the Committee’s February 12, 2015 hearing that the need for leadership across the organization affects morale agency-wide:

[W]hat we really need is leadership. We need a different, dynamic leadership, not specified to one particular floor, but a clear sense from the rank and file that their confidence in the organization would really improve only if they saw substantial change at the top.⁶¹⁰

Indeed, several of the recommendations in the Panel’s December 15, 2014 report involved leadership. Related to the perception that USSS supervisors and senior leadership are simply looking to protect each other, even in the face of misconduct, is the question of how individuals even get into supervisory or senior leadership positions in the first place. The Panel found:

The Service needs to take a . . . fresh look at its promotion and rotation systems. There is a perception among active agents and officers that the promotion system results in the advancement of old hands who served together and got along, rather than on advancing those most capable of leading.⁶¹¹

The 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey found that this perception is held by 68.8 percent employees, with only 13.9 percent believing that promotions are based on merit.⁶¹²

The Panel also made several recommendations regarding the rest of USSS's senior leadership:

To be sure, the Secret Service has innovative thinkers within its ranks, and a number of them have impressed us with their forward-thinking approach. There are future leaders of the Service at the supervisory level but below the senior headquarters ranks. But the organization has not sufficiently invested in developing them at this point to put the agency wholly in their hands.

We are also hopeful that the agency's senior leadership team will, when possible, come from within and move the agency forward in a manner consistent with its core mission. We met with junior and mid-level agents, officers, and staff who were highly talented, innovative thinkers, committed to the agency, and could move it in positive directions in the future. They are the kind of energetic, dynamic, disruptive thinkers that the agency needs in leadership positions.⁶¹⁴

On January 14, 2015, USSS announced four Assistant Directors were being demoted while two others were retiring, resulting in a turnover of six of the agency's eight Assistant Directors.⁶¹⁵ This came approximately one month after the release of the Protective Mission Panel report and its recommendations, and was during the time Clancy was then still serving as Acting Director. At the time, Clancy said in a statement: "Change is necessary to gain a fresh perspective on how we conduct business. I am certain any of our senior executives will be productive and valued assets either in other positions at the Secret Service or the department."⁶¹⁶

However, a whistleblower expressed concern to the Committee that the new Assistant Directors all came from existing senior USSS leadership, and that individuals were merely elevated to the Senior Executive Service to fill the resulting vacancies in management. According to many whistleblowers, the new senior leaders resembled the experience and attitudes of their predecessors. Some whistleblowers told the Committee that until much of current leadership was replaced, there would be no real cultural change in the agency.

During a September 2015 meeting, two Protection Mission Panel members discussed their reaction to the major leadership changes that occurred after issuing their report. They believed the "housecleaning was a good move" and USSS had "significant improvement over where they were" in leadership, including at the Director and Assistant Director levels. However, they noted that the "8th floor" had resisted change in the past and significant leadership changes were still important. They also described how talent had been depleted in recent years as highly-qualified employees left the agency after not being promoted to senior positions. This contributed to a “mixed bag” of those who recently received promotions.⁶¹⁷

USSS senior leadership should continue to ensure that individuals are held accountable as reforms are made.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should make additional positive changes in senior management ensure they uphold standards of excellence.

1. Selection of Clancy as Permanent Director

FINDING: Top leadership from outside USSS will help the agency make necessary changes.

On September 30, 2014, Director Julia Pierson appeared before the Committee to testify about the White House fence jumper. She resigned the next day, on October 1, 2014. In her place, Joseph Clancy was called back from the private sector to serve as the Acting Director.

On December 15, 2014, the Protective Mission Panel released its report. The panel recommended that the next permanent Director come from outside USSS.⁶¹⁸ The report stated: “The need to change, reinvigorate, and question long-held assumptions—from within the agency itself—is too critical right now for the next director to be an insider. . . . The Secret Service needs an agent for change.”⁶¹⁹ The report also explained:

The next director will have to make difficult choices, identifying clear priorities for the organization and holding management accountable for any failure to achieve those priorities. Only a director from outside the Service, removed from organizational traditions and personal relationships, will be able to do the honest top-to-bottom reassessment this will require.⁶²⁰

Notwithstanding the Panel’s recommendation, on February 18, 2015, President Obama announced that he was appointing Clancy as permanent director. In September 2015, Committee staff met with two members of the Protective Mission Panel to get their take on the report nine months later.⁶²¹ They recognize that the most important consideration is that any president feels confident in the person appointed as director. However, both reiterated USSS still needs an outside director, although they do not believe it should or will happen at this stage in President

RECOMMENDATION: The next president should take into account the Panel's recommendation for outside leadership when selecting a USSS director.

2. Resignation of Deputy Director Smith

FINDING: After USSS's public announcement that then-Deputy Director A.T. Smith had accepted a position with another agency, he remained on USSS's payroll as a detailee until his retirement nine months later.

On February 9, 2015, two days before a Committee hearing on the Protective Mission Panel Report, Director Clancy issued an internal message that stated in part:

Today, A.T. Smith announced that he is stepping down as Deputy Director and has accepted another position within the Department of Homeland Security effective Tuesday, February 10, 2015. . . . Deputy Director Smith has had an exceptional law enforcement career spanning nearly 29 years within the Secret Service. His contributions to the agency have been invaluable. Today, A.T. Smith announced that he is stepping down as Deputy Director and has accepted another position within the Department of Homeland Security effective Tuesday, February 10, 2015. Deputy Director Smith was appointed to his position in April 2012.

Throughout his tenure as the 18th Deputy Director of the Secret Service, A.T. led the development of a comprehensive 2014-18 Strategic Plan, defined solutions to critical operational and investigative challenges and implemented a variety of human capital initiatives to enhance employee development.

Deputy Director Smith has had an exceptional law enforcement career spanning nearly 29 years within the Secret Service. His contributions to the Agency have been invaluable. Today, I salute his distinguished service to the Secret Service and the Nation.

Please join me in thanking Deputy Director Smith for his exceptional dedication and service. We wish him continued success with his new responsibilities.

Headquarters (Director) Clancy

In addition, Director Clancy called both Chairman Chaffetz and Ranking Member Cummings to inform them that Smith was being transferred out of the agency. Accordingly, the Committee allowed Director Clancy to postpone his scheduled February 11 testimony before the Committee.

The media was unable to determine where in DHS Smith was going or what his role would be. On February 9, 2015, the Washington Post reported: “Smith, 56, has been invited to transfer to another position in the Department of Homeland Security, according to an email sent early Monday to USSS staff that also praises Smith’s 29 years of service to the agency.”⁶²³

The New York Times referenced USSS’s announcement “that Mr. Smith had stepped down and taken a job at the Department of Homeland Security”⁶²⁴

The Wall Street Journal reported: “Deputy Director A.T. Smith, who has worked at the Secret Service for 29 years, will take ‘another position within the Department of Homeland Security’ on Tuesday, the agency said in a news release. . . . It wasn’t immediately clear what position Mr. Smith would take.”⁶²⁵

⁶²⁵ Andrew Grossman, Secret Service Reassigns No. 2 Official Days Before Hearing, WALL ST. J, Feb. 9, 2015.

On February 11, 2015, the Associated Press honed in on the issue in an article titled “Ousted Secret Service No. 2 to mystery Homeland Security job”:

What new job in the Homeland Security Department is the ousted No. 2 official at the Secret Service doing? Nobody’s saying. . . . In what appears to be a highly unorthodox employment shuffle, Smith — who earned as much as $183,000 a year — was permitted to take an unspecified job inside the highly regarded Homeland Security Investigations unit in U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement. Both agencies are part of the Homeland Security Department. But no one will disclose Smith’s new job title, his responsibilities or how much public salary he’s earning. It’s a mystery whether Smith is investigating cases, shuffling paperwork behind a desk or supervising agents.⁶²⁶

Two days later, the Associated Press returned to the issue, reporting:

The former No. 2 agent at the Secret Service is moving to Immigration and Customs Enforcement as a ‘senior adviser’ for cybercrime after being forced out of the agency charged with protecting the president, according to an internal email obtained by The Associated Press. . . . DHS initially refused to disclose what Smith would do at ICE, saying only that he was transferring to that agency’s Homeland Security Investigations unit.⁶²⁷

In fact, Smith had not been taken off USSS’s payroll. In late April 2015, the Committee learned that Smith was still with the agency. Chairman Chaffetz questioned Director Clancy about the matter at the Committee’s April 29, 2015 hearing:

CHAFFETZ: I have got to ask you, Mr. Clancy: Is A.T. Smith still on the Secret Service payroll?

CLANCY: Yes, sir. He’s a detailee to another Homeland department.

CHAFFETZ: Whose decision was it—yours or Secretary Johnson’s—to detail Smith rather than transfer him out of the agency?

CLANCY: Sir, it was my decision.

CHAFFETZ: So why do you keep him in the Secret Service? You sent out a press release that says he accepted a position within the Department of Homeland Security effective Tuesday, February 10, 2015, but he still works for the Secret Service.

CLANCY: Sir, he's detailed to—he is on our payroll. Yes, sir.

CHAFFETZ: Why?

CLANCY: Sir——

CHAFFETZ: You told me, you told the ranking member, you told the world—you all sent out a press release saying he was being transferred. But he still works for the Secret Service, doesn't he? He still gets a Secret Service——

CLANCY: He gets a Secret Service paycheck. Yes, sir.

CHAFFETZ: How long is he detailed for?

CLANCY: Sir, it has not been defined, the time limit.

CHAFFETZ: It has been since February.

CLANCY: Yes, sir.

CHAFFETZ: You said to us, to me personally, multiple times, the White House did, Homeland Security did, Secretary Johnson did, Mr. Mayorkas did, that you are implementing fundamental changes.

CLANCY: Yes, sir.

CHAFFETZ: And this guy is still on the payroll. You sent out a press release touting that he was going to another department and agency and he does no work for the Secret Service, and, yet, he is on your payroll. Don't ever come back here to Congress and tell me that you have a financial problem when you have got A.T. Smith on your payroll and you say you don't have enough money. You shouldn't have to pay for that out of your budget. He is a very, very senior person. You personally promised that he was being moved and transferred out of the Department, and he hasn't. I am not buying this unlimited detail thing. This is just classic Homeland Security shuffling around, and every one of your employees knows it. How do you think I know it? I don't go to work there. Your employees know it. And you lose their trust and confidence that you are actually implementing the change that you say you are going to. There was no consequence to all these things we have talked about if he can keep his job, have a great title, get the same paycheck, you know, get a detail[], when waters calm down, then we will sort things out.

I have got to tell you, you tried to tell the men and women of the Secret Service, you tried to tell Congress, you tried to tell the world, that you were making changes. And everybody can look this up. It is public knowledge. But here is $183,000 that comes out of your budget that could have gone to somebody else. Hire a new, fresh person. Promote somebody within the agency. Do whatever you might. But then you are going to come crawling back to Congress, saying, "I need more money. I need more money."⁶²⁸

The next day, media reporting showed that Smith's job listing had changed in the internal USSS directory from "Deputy Director" to "Chief of Staff" to Director Clancy.⁶²⁹

On May 11, 2015, USSS provided additional information to the Committee in a letter. According to the letter, "It is anticipated that this detail will end on or before November 2015, as Mr. Smith is subject to mandatory retirement on or about that date."⁶³⁰

On September 14, 2015 the Committee conducted a transcribed interview of the former chief of USSS's Human Capital Division, Deborah Eldredge.⁶³¹ Eldredge explained that detailing agents and officers is not a common practice within USSS; Eldredge could not recall a single instance of an SES level employee ever being detailed, much less an Assistant Director or a Deputy Director.⁶³² Of all USSS employees who were detailed, Eldredge also could not recall a single instance of anyone being detailed indefinitely, or being detailed without the expectation

3. Other Leadership at USSS Headquarters

FINDING: Some USSS rank-and-file do not have confidence in USSS leadership.

The 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey, based on results filed after the January 2015 change in Assistant Directors, captured widespread negative views regarding senior leadership amongst USSS employees and reflected a downward trend for multiple years.⁶³⁵

USSS employees increasingly believe that senior leaders do not maintain high standards of honesty and integrity, with only 22.1 percent believing that they do.⁶³⁶

A review of optional employee separation surveys from fiscal year 2015 revealed that “Senior Leadership Commitment to the Mission” was one of the three aspects of the job ranked lowest by Uniformed Division personnel, and the aspect ranked second-lowest by special agents.⁶⁴⁰ This data is discussed more fully later in this report in the Morale and Attrition section.⁶⁴¹

VI. Running the Agency

1. Staffing Crisis

FINDING: USSS is experiencing a staffing crisis that threatens to jeopardize its critical mission.

USSS currently has fewer employees than at any point over the past decade, including special agents, Uniformed Division (UD) officers, and Administrative, Professional, and Technical (APT) staff.⁶⁴²

The current staffing crisis began after 2011, when the number of full-time employees began to decline sharply. This crisis has three primary causes: (1) significant cuts imposed by the Budget Control Act of 2011; (2) systemic mismanagement at USSS that has been unable to correct these shortfalls; and (3) declining employee morale leading to attrition.

As USSS's mission has grown, its workforce has had to do more with less. According to USSS, salaries and expenses require seventy-five cents of every dollar USSS receives.⁶⁴³ Thus, beginning in 2012, USSS imposed a moratorium on hiring in order to fund existing salaries.⁶⁴⁴

Major staffing declines have continued since 2011 in all categories of employment.⁶⁴⁵

This moratorium was certainly imposed on the hiring of special agents and officers; some USSS personnel indicated that limited APT hires may have been made during this period, although APT attrition and limited hiring also significantly decreased overall APT numbers during that same time period.

Table 1. USSS Staffing Levels, FY2011 and FY2015

	2011	2015	Decline
Special Agents	3,535	3,257	7.9%

APT Staff	2,069	1,729	16.4%
Total Employees	7,024	6,315	10.1%

In contrast, if staffing had increased after 2011 at the same rate from 2006 to 2011, USSS would have been projected to have more than 7,400 employees as of 2015.⁶⁴⁶

⁶⁴⁷ Id.

There is widespread agreement that current staffing levels at USSS are wholly inadequate. For example, last December, the Protective Mission Panel concluded that the UD and Presidential Protective Division were “stretched beyond their limits” and recommended immediate increases in staffing:

As an interim step, the Panel recommends that Congress and the Executive Branch work together to ensure appropriations sufficient for an additional 85 special agents and 200 Uniformed Division officers; the Panel believes this is a first step, but likely not the last step, to ensure adequate training and personnel for the White House.⁶⁴⁸

The Panel explained:

Perhaps the Service’s greatest strength—the commitment of its personnel to sacrifice and do the job “no matter what”—has had unintended consequences. Special agents and Uniformed Division personnel protecting the White House work an unsustainable number of hours. Rather than invest in systems to manage the organization more effectively and accurately predict its needs, the Service simply adds more overtime for existing personnel. Rather than sending its agents and officers to training, it keeps them at their posts.⁶⁴⁹

During the Committee’s hearing on February 12, 2015, Panel member Thomas Perrelli testified that these increases were a first step:

I think that is why our proposal of, again, 200 additional Uniformed Division officers and 85 additional special agents, we thought that that would allow the current workforce to reach training levels that we thought were acceptable. It doesn’t answer the question of what is the long term right size of the organization.⁶⁵⁰

He reiterated his assessment during a briefing with the Committee in September.⁶⁵¹

Director Clancy has also been vocal on this issue. Shortly after being named permanent director, Clancy submitted written testimony to the House Committee on Appropriations in which he stated: “Of all the Panel’s recommendations, there are no greater priorities for me than staffing the agency at a level commensurate with the demands of the mission. . . .”⁶⁵² Clancy also stated that this was “critically important” and represented a need for USSS to “get back to basics.”⁶⁵³

On October 8, 2015, USSS's Chief Strategy Officer informed the Committee that the need to undo the staffing deficit is the essential issue for USSS.⁶⁵⁴

The Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association, which represents the interests of rank-and-file federal law enforcement, wrote to the Committee in February:

Even the best can only maintain a standard of excellence for so long under the debilitating "make due with less" environment. While enduring an increase in mission demands, concurrent with a decrease in agency resources, the Secret Service has been confronted by significant challenges that have impacted its legacy of excellence. The cost has been the steady degradation of the agency's manpower, resources and training capabilities due to this lack of funding.⁶⁵⁵

Recently, Congressional appropriators have also expressed support for reversing this alarming trend. As discussed in more detail below, Congress provided USSS significantly less than the President requested in 2011, 2012, and 2013. In 2014 and 2015, Congressional appropriators approved more funding than the President requested, but a continuing resolution placed restrictions on the ability of USSS to use those funds, hindering hiring and training efforts.⁶⁵⁶ The House Appropriations Committee recently concluded that "there is no doubt that the USSS desperately needs additional personnel."⁶⁵⁷

Prior to 2014, USSS last completed a human capital plan in March 2004.⁶⁵⁸ It was intended to project USSS's goals for 2004-2008, although due to the unpredictable nature of hiring, USSS has recently acknowledged the limitations of only completing a plan every four years.⁶⁵⁹ No final human capital plan was developed for the period 2008-2014.⁶⁶⁰ Tom Dougherty, the Chief Human Capital Officer from 2010 to 2014, claimed that this failure resulted from a lack of clarity regarding who was responsible for drafting such a plan.⁶⁶¹

Despite this support, USSS has not been able to increase the number of personnel in the year since the Panel issued its recommendations. In fact, USSS staffing has declined even further. From the date the Panel's report was released until the end of fiscal year 2015, USSS hired 129 new officers.⁶⁶² USSS only graduated and placed fifty-nine new officers on the job in all of fiscal year 2015 (even including the six weeks of the fiscal year before the December 15 report).⁶⁶³ During the same time period, at least eighty-six officers left USSS.⁶⁶⁴ Thus, while the UD had 1,344 personnel onboard at the time of the Panel’s report, it had 1,329 at the end of fiscal year 2015.⁶⁶⁵ Not only did the agency fall short of the goal to increase the UD by 200 officers, by the end of fiscal year 2015 the UD was actually smaller than when the Panel issued its recommendations. This problem was aggravated by the fact that additional funding approved by Congress for fiscal year 2015 was not available to USSS because it was operating under a continuing resolution that provided lower funding levels.

RECOMMENDATION: Congress should ensure that USSS has sufficient funds to restore staffing to required levels, and USSS should ensure that it has systems in place to achieve these goals.

2. Budget

USSS has a zero-failure mission and must be given the appropriate funding to meet that mission. Both the Protective Mission Panel and the Committee agree that USSS must be able to properly define the mission and determine what the mission will cost in order to allow Congress to fund USSS at the appropriate levels.

A. Need for Zero-Based Budget

FINDING: USSS does not currently have a zero-based budget to accurately determine the costs of its mission.

In addition to recommending an immediate increase in staffing, the Panel’s recommendation that USSS create a zero-based budget is one of its most important, and a lynchpin for many of the Panel’s other recommendations. The Panel described the following failings with the current budget process:

Put simply, the Service does not have systems in place to make the most prudent budgeting choices. Like so many agencies, the Service has, for years, looked at its base budget and tried to ballpark how much more it might be able to get through the OMB and congressional processes. The result, however, is that no one has really looked at how much the mission, done right, actually costs. That is why one of our most important recommendations is that a new director start with a zero-based budget. Forget about what the Service has asked for in the past: Define the mission, and make the argument to policy makers in the Executive Branch and Congress that this sum—which we believe to be more than current appropriations—is needed.⁶⁶⁶

During its review, the Panel also found:

The President and other protectees cannot receive the best possible protection when agents and officers are deployed for longer and longer hours with fewer and fewer days off. For years, the Service has taken on additional missions—in both its protective and investigative roles—but has not matched its request for additional resources to those expanded missions. The Service has to increase the number of agents and, to an even greater extent, increase the size of the Uniformed Division to ensure protection of the White House.⁶⁶⁷

The Panel further described the problems with USSS’s current budgetary system:

Rather than specifically defining the mission and modeling a corresponding staffing plan, it appears to the Panel that the Service has done what many agencies have done: Look at its base budget from the prior year, triage a few of the worst areas of need, make a prediction about how much additional money DHS, OMB, or Congress might provide, and then pursue those resources.⁶⁶⁸

The Panel also provided a recommendation on what should be included in the zero-based budget:

The zero-based budget should take account of, among other things, the expanding protection responsibilities, the increased threat environment, and the need for substantial and ongoing investments in technology. But . . . it should also entail a review of the Service’s full set of missions, both within the protective mission and the investigative mission, to determine if any of those missions should be trimmed or eliminated to ensure adequate resources for and dedication to the Service’s paramount mission. Thus, while the Panel expects a new director will need to seek substantially new funds for the Service to enhance its protection of the President and the White House, the Panel also expects a new director to take a hard look at whether some resources could come from other aspects of the Service.⁶⁶⁹

The Committee agrees creating a zero-based budget is critical for improving USSS. Although USSS has begun this process, the agency has advised the Committee that it does not expect to have a true zero-based budget until FY18, and expects more iterations after that.⁶⁷⁰

⁶⁷⁰ Oct. 8, 2015 USSS OSP Briefing, supra note 373.

The Committee understands that while creating a zero-based budget is a very time-consuming and arduous process, the self-assessment required will be of great benefit. USSS must fully commit to this process and ensure that the commitment is shared throughout the agency.

The Committee believes that, as part of the budgeting process, experts with specialized expertise in budgeting and workforce planning from other federal agencies and the private sector should be brought in to the development process. The zero-based budget should be submitted to a third party for a complete validation of its methodology, in addition to the reviews done by Congress. The Committee expects that any zero-based budget the agency creates will need to go through several budgetary cycles before it fully captures the needs of the agency.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should include workforce planning experts outside the agency in developing a zero-based budget, including a third party validation of methodology.

B. Lack of Budgetary Controls and Systems

FINDING: USSS does not have adequate systems in place to manage its budget.

One of the major problems with USSS's current budget system is that there is no system. Panel member Thomas Perrelli testified to the Committee that the Panel found USSS's inability to provide full information about budgetary processes concerning. In fact, the Panel could not even determine who at USSS should be responsible for answering budgetary questions:

WALKER: Maybe we could say that was one of your larger, if not largest, surprises, that there was no go-to person when you had budgetary questions?

PERRELLI: We were certainly disappointed that we could not get a number of questions answered.⁶⁷¹

The Panel never obtained a clear understanding of the budget because USSS did not even have necessary documents that would have assisted the Panel in developing this understanding. For example, Perrelli testified that the Panel could not make specific budgetary recommendations because USSS simply lacked the requisite information:

PERRELLI: [A]s I think we indicated, I think one of the challenges was trying to get the kind of budget—

CHAFFETZ: Right.

⁶⁷¹ Protective Mission Panel Hearing, supra note 610, at 32.

PERRELLI: The kind of resource documents with respect to evaluating some of the staffing issues that we were concerned about. So, as I think we noted, trying to get that information was challenging and I think, in no small part, because I don't think they have it in a form that is—you know, would be sort of useful to use. And so I think that—you know, I would identify that as a challenge we had.

CHAFFETZ: The budget?

PERRELLI: Those documents, because I think—or that information. I think more of it as information than documents. We wanted to make some, you know, even more specific recommendations about the appropriate size of the Service.⁶⁷²

Perrelli also testified that funding discrepancies are attributable in part to the agency's inability to communicate its funding needs:

It has not been a question of Congress not appropriating funds, but the Service not coming to Congress and saying what it needed, as well as making some of the hard choices about other aspects of the mission.

[I] think the issue that we really saw was the Service having difficulty in defining what it needed and seeking resources for that. So it wasn't so much that—it wasn't that Congress was saying, you know, we are not going to provide the President's budget. It was that, as this was working up through the process, the Service was approaching its budget by saying, "Here is how much we have. Maybe we ask for a little bit more," rather than saying, "Here is what the mission is, here is what we need to achieve it," and pursuing those resources."⁶⁷³

Perrelli further testified that USSS was not relying on proper staffing modeling when requesting money from OMB and Congress:

There is no question that—and again, I think we talk about this in our report—I think we found that the Service did what perhaps other agencies do, which is they look at what they have, they think about what they might be able to get through the agency, the OMB, and through Congress. And they ask for a little bit more. And they maybe ask for a little bit more in an area that they think might be one that Congress is interested in funding. Our concern is that over time, what happened with the Service is that they weren't continuing to increase their staffing, they weren't asking, necessarily modeling and making decisions about how much they really needed.⁶⁷⁴

USSS has taken positive first steps toward elevating the importance of tracking its financial and operations systems, including the hiring of a Chief Operating Officer and a Chief Financial Officer. These, and other leaders, must ensure that the proper systems are put into place so that data can accurately be tracked. The Committee expects this to require a wholesale reevaluation.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should implement systems to track spending and other basic accounting data.

C. Congressional Appropriations

FINDING: Congressional funding for USSS has been inconsistent over the past decade, including several years of cuts followed by more recent efforts to reverse this trend.

In fiscal year 2011, the President requested $1.572 billion for USSS,⁶⁷⁵ and Congress approved $1.515 billion.⁶⁷⁶ This $56 million deficit was the largest single-year difference between an Administration's request and a Congressional appropriation for USSS since 1999, the last year for which the Committee obtained data.⁶⁷⁷

In fiscal year 2012, this trend continued. The President requested $1.699 billion, but Congress approved only $1.667 billion, which was $32 million less than requested.⁶⁷⁸

In fiscal year 2013, the President requested $1.601 billion, but Congress ultimately approved $1.524 billion after automatic funding cuts imposed by the Budget Control Act.⁶⁷⁹ This $77 million difference set a new single-year record for the deficit between an Administration's request for USSS funding and a Congressional appropriation since at least 1999.⁶⁸⁰

In these three years alone, from fiscal years 2011 through 2013, Congress approved $165 million less than the combined amount requested by the President for USSS.⁶⁸¹

In fiscal year 2014, this trend began to change. The President requested $1.546 billion, and Congress appropriated $1.585 billion. This increase of nearly $39 million was the first time since fiscal year 2007 that Congress approved an amount higher than the President's request.⁶⁸²

Similarly, in fiscal year 2015, the President requested $1.636 billion, and Congress appropriated $1.666 billion, nearly $30 million more than the President requested.⁶⁸³ The House Committee on Appropriations explained this increase:

Recent incidents at the White House have raised serious concerns about the leadership and management of the Secret Service. In its Security Report on the White House Incurion Incident of September 19, 2014, the Department highlighted critical failures in information sharing and communications, confusion about operational protocols, and gaps in training at the White House Complex. While some of these problems can be attributed to insufficient resources requested by DHS and the Office of Management and Budget, others are systemic and appear to reflect broader cultural challenges within the Secret Service. To begin addressing some of these shortfalls, the bill provides an additional $25,000,000 in the Protection of Persons and Facilities PPA. These resources shall be used in part to support additional tactical canine units and staff, assess and bolster security infrastructure at both the White House Complex and Vice President's Residence, and fund overtime and training.⁶⁸⁴

However, much of the additional funding in fiscal year 2015, including the $25 million for the protection of persons and facilities, was not available to USSS. Until December 11, 2015, USSS will have been operating under Continuing Resolution P.L. 114-53, which provides funding at a rate of operations equal to what was provided in fiscal year 2015 minus 0.2108 percent.⁶⁸⁵

In February 2015, Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson explained the distressing ramifications of operating under a continuing resolution:

⁶⁸³ See App., Budget of the U.S. Gov't, Fiscal Year 2015, Office of Mgmt. and Budget; Department of Homeland Security Appropriations Act, 2014, P.L. 114-4 (2014). The President also requested, and Congress appropriated, $49,935,000 for acquisition, construction, and improvement expenses for USSS for fiscal year 2015.

⁶⁸⁴ Department of Homeland Security Appropriations Act, H.R. Res. 240, 114th Cong. (2015), explanatory statement at 41.

To those in Congress who may be contemplating punting or kicking the can a few weeks down the road, I must remind you that the consequences to this Department, if we remain on a continuing resolution, are also severe. We are restricted to last year's funding levels if we are on a continuing resolution and must operate in a state of uncertainty about when the next infusion of funds will be.⁶⁸⁶

According to a USSS spokesman, operating under a continuing resolution meant the agency would not have $21 million to train security agents or purchase vehicles and equipment for the 2016 campaign, $4 million for training President Obama's post-White House security detail, or the $25 million to implement Protective Mission Panel recommendations, including hiring 85 more special agents for the Presidential Protective Division and 200 UD officers.⁶⁸⁷

Over the past decade, from fiscal years 2006 through 2015, Congress approved $97 million less than the total amount requested by the President for USSS. From fiscal year 2008 until fiscal year 2013, Congress approved $187 million less than the total amount requested by the Administration. In fiscal years 2006-07 and 2014-15, Congress approved $90 million more than the Administration requested.⁶⁸⁸

The President requested $1.939 billion for fiscal year 2016.⁶⁸⁹ Much of this increase is attributed to 2016 being a presidential election year.⁶⁹⁰ There are currently more than a dozen candidates, and three already have protective details.⁶⁹¹ Of the $215 million requested for increases in salaries and expenses, $123 million is devoted to the anticipated increased demands of the 2016 presidential campaign cycle.⁶⁹² Perrelli described this increase as a cyclical occurrence:

And, of course, there are, as occurs regularly on 4-year cycles, the Service both draws from its investigative force for Presidential campaigns, but also usually receives, seeks and receives additional appropriations every 4 years in order to plan for those campaigns because the amount of travel which is very unpredictable increases.⁶⁹³

As part of this four-year cycle, 290 personnel would shift from domestic field operations to presidential candidate nominee protection.⁶⁹⁴

The President's fiscal year 2016 budget requests funding for 6,694 total positions, which would be an increase of 379 positions over fiscal year 2015.⁶⁹⁵ However, even with this increase, USSS would still have 743 fewer positions than if it had continued to increase the number of staff at the same rate as from 2006 to 2011.

Approximately $65.7 million of the fiscal year 2016 increase is for the implementation of Protective Mission Panel recommendations.⁶⁹⁶ These include critical personnel enhancements, including more administrative support in Human Resources to help hire additional staff and process security clearances, and pursuing retention initiatives to lower attrition among UD officers.⁶⁹⁷

RECOMMENDATION: Congress should fully support the President's fiscal year 2016 request for USSS—particularly in light of the increased demand of the presidential election year—provided that there are adequate controls in place to ensure that the funds are used to address ongoing hiring challenges.

D. Hiring Challenges

FINDING: USSS has fewer total personnel now than when the Protective Mission Panel recommended a hiring increase in December 2014.

At the end of fiscal year 2015, the total number of positions at USSS declined to 6,315 positions, a reduction of fifty-two positions since the Panel issued its report last year.⁶⁹⁸ More specifically, the Uniformed Division had 1,344 personnel at the time of the Panel's report, but only 1,329 at the end of fiscal year 2015.⁶⁹⁹

In addition to attrition and changes to the hiring process, which are addressed below,⁷⁰⁰ a key reason for these challenges is the huge decline since 2011 in the number of APT staff, including the employees who do the hiring for USSS. Of all the categories of employees, APT staff have had the most significant declines—more than 16 percent since 2011.⁷⁰¹

Without adequate APT staff, hiring additional special agents and UD officers has been difficult. Like the rest of USSS's support staff, these employees are stretched to the limit. It is clear that USSS is in desperate need of additional APT personnel and that more attention must be paid to this essential category of employees.

As a short-term measure, USSS recently hired temporary contractors to assist with several areas of USSS operations, including the hiring process.⁷⁰² In 2015, USSS contracted for twenty-eight individuals to assist with the hiring process.⁷⁰³

Panel member Thomas Perrelli testified that there have been noticeable improvements to the hiring process:

There was certainly a period of time where the Service's hiring process was not functioning as intended, whether for budgetary or other reasons. Because problems with the hiring process, they were not getting classes through. Our sense is that that has improved. They are using different hiring practices again. And we think that is improving. But . . . we continue to believe that having—some of the mistakes that have been made in the past related to not having a professionalized human resources function, or led by professionals in that area. And we think that is an important change going forward.⁷⁰⁴

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should focus immediately on increasing its permanent APT personnel, especially those with a role in hiring, and should consider seeking temporary details from other agencies to expedite hiring.

3. Morale and Attrition

FINDING: Morale at USSS is critically low and likely contributes to attrition.

Struggles with morale and attrition are not new to USSS. USSS human resources and strategic planning personnel acknowledge, however, that given the agency’s current staffing levels, the effects of attrition have been particularly acute in fiscal year 2015.⁷⁰⁵

Internal USSS documents discuss retention challenges within the Uniformed Division dating back to the end of the 1990s,⁷⁰⁶ and numbers for the past ten years show a fluctuating cycle of attrition among both UD officers and special agents.⁷⁰⁷ Many whistleblowers attribute the current overall high in attrition to low morale arising from poor management and the other internal issues outlined above. Previous periods of high attrition may be more attributable to outside influences, such as the need for experienced agents in other components during the formative years of DHS.⁷⁰⁸

Low morale at USSS is objectively demonstrated by the 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey (FEVS). Over 43,000 DHS employees responded to the 2015 FEVS, which was conducted between April 27 and June 5, 2015.⁷⁰⁹ DHS again ranked last among large agencies in “employee engagement,” at fifty-three percent and “global satisfaction” at forty-seven percent.⁷¹⁰ USSS fared exceptionally poorly compared to other components within DHS, seeing an “employee engagement” rating of forty-nine, down seven points from last year, and a “leadership and knowledge management” rating of forty, down ten points from last year.⁷¹¹ In fact, USSS saw a drop in all its engagement scores.⁷¹²

The confluence of increased security incidents and leadership reaction to past and new misconduct has undoubtedly also contributed to a decrease in job and organizational satisfaction, though it has been on the decline since at least 2011.⁷¹⁵

While hiring is a key part of the solution to USSS's staffing challenges, new hires will not replace the wealth of knowledge and experience that is leaving the agency. A fiscal year 2014 report to Congress noted, "To address congressional concerns, USSS will hire to replace attrition,”⁷¹⁶ and set as a goal “to stop and reverse attrition experienced since FY 2013.”⁷¹⁷ Instead, in fiscal year 2015, USSS experienced its highest attrition rate among special agents in at least ten years, and the highest combined agent and officer rate in seven years.⁷¹⁸

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should report to Congress on additional proposals to decrease attrition and improve morale.

A. Uniformed Division

There were 1,420 Uniformed Division officers in fiscal year 2011. USSS immediately experienced sharp declines with a net loss of thirty-eight officers in 2012 and an additional sixty in 2013. After a modest increase of thirteen officers in 2014, USSS ended fiscal year 2015 at 1,329 positions, still below 2006 levels.⁷¹⁹

USSS has long faced staffing challenges within the UD, the unit responsible for the physical protection of the White House. One internal USSS document from May 2000 suggested the average attrition rate in the prior two fiscal years was twice as high as in the preceding six years.⁷²⁰ It concluded the UD required “315 more full-time equivalent (FTE) positions in order to substantially reduce overtime among its officer population and improve declining working conditions.”⁷²¹ It suggested that any alternatives would result in “a potential degradation in the quality of security, personnel, and morale.”⁷²² An internal USSS report from May 2003 on staffing and morale in the UD noted the long hours, insufficient staffing, high overtime demands, and resulting decline in quality of life. The report further concluded that USSS employees believed “safety of protectees, officers, and general public is tenuous.”⁷²³ A study in September 2004 examined the effect of these issues on attrition from the UD.⁷²⁴

As the December 2014 Panel report highlighted, these problems have not gone away. In fact, the Panel report mirrors reports from over ten years earlier, suggesting USSS has never adequately addressed these issues. A 2002 U.S. News and World Report investigation highlighted many of these specific problems.⁷²⁵ According to that report, then-Director Brian

Stafford acknowledged the “continuous loss of personnel” due to “enormous overtime burdens” and said that he was “well aware that the attrition rate of the UD is at a critical level.”⁷²⁶

In May 2014, USSS began responding to the shortages by flying in special agents from around the country for one- and two-week details to the White House.⁷²⁷ Some speculated this practice may have played a role in the September 19, 2014, fence-jumping incident, as such agents would naturally be less familiar with the White House grounds and intruder response plans.⁷²⁸

On October 21, 2015, DHS OIG issued a management alert to USSS regarding the fact that it had encountered two UD officers sleeping on the job.⁷²⁹ The alert noted that “[f]atigue from travel, overtime shifts, and long hours contributed” to “officer safety issues that pose an immediate or potential danger to [USSS] officers and those whom they protect.”⁷³⁰ The alert stated: “We are concerned that [USSS’s] staffing and scheduling process does not ensure that officers receive adequate breaks while on duty and time off between shifts.”⁷³¹

A review of optional employee separation surveys from fiscal year 2015 revealed that the three aspects of the job ranked lowest by UD personnel on a scale of one to six were “Work Schedule/Hours” (2.5), “Training Opportunities” (2.7), and “Senior Leadership Commitment to the Mission” (2.8).⁷³²

Interestingly, more than fifty-one percent of those surveyed did not speak to a UD officer prior to their start date, a surprisingly large number.⁷³⁴ Nearly everyone who has commented on UD hiring has emphasized that the opportunity to speak with an officer prior to being hired is one of the best ways to ensure that UD hires have a realistic understanding of the job. Of survey respondents, almost forty-four percent did not believe the information they received prior to being hired accurately reflected their duties.⁷³⁵

Of those UD officers who completed separation surveys, over half who left were between the ages of twenty-six to thirty.⁷³⁶ Further, almost seventy-four percent of the officers who left had between zero and five years of service.⁷³⁷ This marks a significantly high level of turnover among young, inexperienced officers and presents a major challenge to USSS, which has to onboard officers faster when the ones they just hired are leaving. It also prevents USSS from consistently developing young UD officers into more experienced mid- and senior-level officers and perpetuates a young and inexperienced workforce.

On April 2, 2015 Committee staff met with the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Uniformed Division Labor Committee (UDLC).⁷³⁸ The UDLC leadership described a workforce on the verge of collapsing due to understaffing and pending attrition.⁷³⁹ They cited the exhaustive nature of the job, constant overtime, and lack of respect from Presidential Protective Division leadership as major factors in UD attrition.⁷⁴⁰ Their characterizations of morale and attrition, and the connection between the two, tracks the objective data and perceptions the Committee has identified.⁷⁴¹

USSS has taken steps to begin to decelerate the attrition, and senior management appears to recognize that additional changes must be made. As a short-term step to immediately curb attrition, in fiscal year 2015, UD officers were offered 5 percent retention bonuses to be paid out over 2 years in order to ensure they remain during that time.⁷⁴² Approximately 1,100 of 1,300 UD officers were eligible for retirement, and USSS personnel estimated over 1,000 officers accepted the offer.⁷⁴³ While such bonuses are not a permanent solution, USSS personnel have stated that various other, more long-term retention proposals are under development.⁷⁴⁴

B. Special Agents

In fiscal year 2011, there were 3,542 special agent positions. USSS had a net loss of 100 special agents in 2012 and 111 special agents in 2013. The decreases continued, but were less dramatic in 2014 and 2015, with a net loss of forty-seven agents and twenty agents respectively. At the end of fiscal year 2015, USSS was down 285 special agent positions from 2011 levels.⁷⁴⁵

Since May 2014, USSS has flown in special agents from field offices around the country for temporary duty standing posts at the White House in order to make up for Uniformed Division shortages.⁷⁴⁶ As with the UD, many factors may contribute to high attrition and low morale among special agents. In fiscal year 2015, attrition was higher for agents than any time in the last ten fiscal years.⁷⁴⁷

As of the spring of 2015, USSS's Office of Investigations had 400 fewer employees than it did in 2012.⁷⁴⁸ At that time, USSS personnel projected that they had approximately 272 protection vacancies—235 based in Washington, D.C. and thirty-eight based outside of Washington, D.C..⁷⁴⁹ USSS recently stopped internally distributing lists of special agents who leave the agency, contrary to its practice of distributing such lists for many years.

Budget concerns alone do not account for reductions in personnel; attrition also plays a large role. USSS's fiscal year 2014 human capital plan stated the average projected attrition per year for special agents was 120.⁷⁵⁰ As of July 25, 2015 (roughly ten months into the fiscal year), fiscal year 2015 attrition was already 171, nearly 150 percent of the projection, though total attrition from 2012 to 2014 ranged from 100 in 2012 to ultimately 141 in 2014.⁷⁵¹

Retirement numbers are routinely affected by such factors as the number of individual employees who have reached the eligible retirement age or the mandatory retirement age of fifty-seven at any given time.⁷⁵² However, USSS human resources personnel acknowledged they are losing fifty-one-year-old eligible retirees at a higher rate; unlike in the past, fewer individuals were staying with the agency until mandatory retirement.⁷⁵³ Thus, only a handful of the sixty-three fiscal year 2015 retirements as of July 25, 2015 were mandatory.⁷⁵⁴ Further, USSS said the retirement eligibility pool will double next year.⁷⁵⁵

A review of the seventy-three special agent separation surveys from fiscal year 2015 indicated that the vast bulk (nearly ninety-two percent) of those leaving the agency were GS-13s, many of whom had been with the agency for five years or more.⁷⁵⁶ The most common plan after leaving USSS was to join another federal agency, which nearly seventy-three percent of respondents cited.⁷⁵⁷ Similar to the UD, younger special agents are leaving in higher numbers: more than sixty-five percent of special agents who left had ten years of service or less, although the vast majority were on the job long enough to have realistic expectations of the position, and nearly seventy-three percent were forty or younger.⁷⁵⁸

As in the UD, the overall staffing trend has had implications for the special agent workload. Starting in January 2015, USSS's Office of Investigations increased the investigative travel schedule from thirty-five percent of an office's available special agent manpower to forty percent. USSS cited increased travel by protectees, increased protective responsibilities, increased training, and reduced manpower in the field. The special agent workload can be expected to increase in 2016 with a large number of declared candidates for president now eligible for protection, which, in turn, further stresses staffing levels.

The three aspects of the job ranked lowest by special agents were "Training Opportunities" (3.0 out of 6), "Senior Leadership Commitment to the Mission" (3.1), and "Rewards Based on Merit" (3.3).⁷⁵⁹

Regarding flexible tour of duty, some employees repeatedly raised USSS’s career track model in interviews with the Committee. Although all USSS special agents sign a mobility agreement requiring them to travel to duty stations as required, some whistleblowers complained of unpredictability in the application of USSS’s career track model. Roughly speaking, special agents follow a career track in three phases: Phase 1 involves special agents going to a USSS field office to develop investigative expertise; Phase 2 entails a protective detail; and Phase 3 involves a final field office, with the possibility of being preceded by a headquarters assignment or protective specialty.⁷⁶¹ Although USSS informed Committee staff in briefings that current USSS workforce planning needs dictate a Phase 1 length of approximately six to nine years, then-Special Agent in Charge John Koleno acknowledged that the expectation of the length of Phase 1 has shifted over time, and that several years ago new employees had been given the expectation that the length of Phase 1 would be four to six years.⁷⁶² USSS does not publish its current career phase expectations for internal employee review. Thus, some USSS employees expressed that after being passed over for protective details in the timeframe of four to six years when they expected to progress to Phase 2, they eventually planted roots in the locations of their Phase 1 assignments.

Data provided by USSS regarding agents still in Phase 1 confirmed some individuals had dramatically exceeded the four to six year timeframe: thirty-six agents had been there for ten to

In 2013 and 2014, USSS ordered a large number of these agents to report to USSS’s Washington (D.C) Field Office.⁷⁶⁴ These so-called “forced transfers” became a source of contention with several employees.

Some employees also expressed confusion about mixed messages from USSS management with regard to other elements of career tracks. USSS told the Committee that there is no career track that would allow an agent to stay in the field for their entire career.⁷⁶⁵ Special agents say they have also been told in the past, however, of a career track known as the “Investigative Management Career Track,” which agents inferred would allow them to move between USSS field offices and move up the management career chain. Overall, the confusion about career paths has been a source of frustration for some special agents.

On September 1, 2015, USSS issued a new directive on the topic of “Special Agent Career Progression Guidelines” that superseded the prior career track policy.⁷⁶⁶ According to the accompanying message, the new policy was developed to create better balance between employees’ work life needs and the critical impact personnel constraints are having on the protective mission.⁷⁶⁷

C. Administrative, Professional, and Technical Staff

In fiscal year 2011, there were 2,069 APT positions. By the end of fiscal year 2015, there were only 1,729 APT positions, down approximately 16.4 percent.⁷⁶⁸ As long ago as 1990, the General Accounting Office (former name of the Government Accountability Office) reported significant problems in recruiting and retaining qualified support (i.e., non-law enforcement) staff, with some vacancies taking months or years to fill.⁷⁶⁹

The Protective Mission Panel recommended that USSS reform its administrative capabilities⁷⁷⁰ and specifically “[p]romote specialized expertise in its budget, workforce, and technology functions.”⁷⁷¹ For example, as the Panel noted, “An agency that needs the best agents and officers on the front lines needs a hiring process run by human resources experts valued for their specialized knowledge about how to recruit and retain talent, in a timely and efficient manner.”⁷⁷² In its discussion on the issue, the Panel wrote:

Positions that should be filled by individuals with specific administrative experience and expertise are instead filled by special agents on a rotation to headquarters. . . . [F]illing these important administrative functions with agents rather than professional administrators . . . has also fed into a strong perception that the agency relies heavily on an old-boys’ network for its management. . . .⁷⁷³

With respect to the administrative staff who work at USSS, the Panel took note of the ways in which their reporting structure was a detriment to USSS:

[T]he Secret Service does utilize professionals to perform many functions But . . . [e]xcept for the Service’s General Counsel, all of these civilian professionals report to an assistant director, all of whom are agents, and who themselves report to the Deputy Director. Thus, key leadership and management positions—particularly leadership-level oversight of the agency’s budget, human resources (personnel and training), and technology functions—remain essentially in the hands of agents rather than administrative professionals or subject-matter experts.⁷⁷⁴

These themes were repeated by former USSS security officer Robin DeProspero-Philpot, who began with USSS in 1979 as a GS-2 clerk typist.⁷⁷⁵ She spoke of a need in the agency for “equal respect no matter what position you are . . . [Y]ou do need 1811s to kind of break that gap there where, ‘Oh, who is she? She’s not an 1811. . . .’ [Y]ou know, that type of mentality that still goes on.”⁷⁷⁶ She described her experience at the agency over more than three decades:

Over the past several years—I mean, again, I’ve had over 35 years—and when I first joined the Secret Service—my father was an agent. He worked on the Presidential detail with President Reagan. He was the SAIC there. So I’ve seen the agency morph and grow. When I started there, there was approximately 3,000 employees in the Secret Service. We have more than doubled. At that point, one of the biggest mottoes for the Secret Service, that we thought we were a family. And I truly, truly believed that we were a family. Everybody knew everybody. Everybody respected each other. And I didn’t care whether or not you were an APT, you were a Uniformed Division officer, or you were a special agent. We all worked together to perform the missions that we had. And, again, there was a lot of respect for one another. I think, not really quite sure why . . . now there is a true, true division between SA, UD, and APT.⁷⁷⁷

When I was in—when I joined the Secret Service, the vast amount, a vast majority of APT individuals that worked for the agency, the highest graded level that they ever reached was a 9 or an 11, possibly a 13. I was the first non-1811 chief of my division in its history.⁷⁷⁸

DeProspero-Philpot particularly highlighted how transitory USSS management overseeing the efforts of the APT staff had been. DeProspero-Philpot made clear that this turnover affected operations:

[Y]ou have to understand that the assistant director’s office over my division, HUM—I’ve had seven assistant directors in the last 10 years.⁷⁷⁹

When you look at the assistant directors that were in that directorate, especially, I would say, the last four or five, no disrespect to them whatsoever, they were on their way out of the agency. . . . This is where I go back to having the appropriate people managing some of these divisions when they don't have any experience.⁷⁸⁰

She also noted the disadvantages of such a system:

When you've got 1811s moving around, retiring, moving around in different directorates, retiring, and you've got 1811s coming up, and they're coming up in this particular field, protection or investigation, and they're over here, and then 2 years later they're over here, and they're over here, is there a true loyalty to exactly what they're doing in those respective directorates? They're not there to forecast what's going to happen in 5 to 10 years. They weren't there 5 years previously when it was really, really good. So I can just say that generally the APT community who are managers, who 10 years were forecasting what we're going through now, where we don't have enough IT resources, we don't have enough manpower in our divisions, where we knew of upcoming and new initiatives and mandates, that's where it's frustrating. So, 10 years ago, if we would have addressed these problems, I don't think we would be sitting here right now.⁷⁸¹

DeProspero-Philpot stated that the aggregate effect that this was hugely detrimental to APT morale:

You have an assistant director, that oversees the [Chief Human Capital Officer] for the agency, with no HR experience. . . . And you have an assistant director who oversees a chief security officer, who has no security experience. And these three individuals now oversee this entire hiring and security. And you have individuals, non-1811s . . . who have that experience, but they don't want to listen. So therefore—and this is kind of across the board when you look at the infrastructure. . . . [W]hen you send 1811s in to do procurements or, you know, security, or HR, [to] manage—I'm not saying do it—manage these professionals, the morale of the APT community right now is at an extremely critical point where I know of people that have been in the agency for 10, 15, 20, 25 years who are looking to leave because it's not worth it anymore. And that's dangerous to me.⁷⁸²

When asked what could improve that morale, DeProspero-Philpot responded: "I think you need to put more APT people in those positions that know how to do it."⁷⁸³

It is clear that more APT staff are needed. APT have been affected by the same personnel reduction trends as officers and agents in recent years. Although some APT staff were hired during the period when no agents or officers were hired due to budgetary concerns, according to internal USSS documents, the agency lost 100 APT positions in the Office of Investigations due to sequestration.⁷⁸⁴ As of fiscal year 2014, USSS had lost 235 APT positions altogether since fiscal year 2011.⁷⁸⁵ USSS's Chief Strategy Officer reported that APT numbers are at the lowest APT level USSS has ever had.⁷⁸⁶ However, he said the agency's priority was hiring law enforcement personnel instead.⁷⁸⁷

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should ensure that supervisors and managers of APT staff have the requisite knowledge, skills, and experience.

4. Hiring and Security Clearance Process

A. Historical Security Clearance Issues

FINDING: USSS hired at least one individual without verifying his citizenship.

A review of USSS disciplinary files raised many questions about USSS's historical processing of security clearances. For example, in one case USSS issued a security clearance for a physical security specialist without independently verifying that the individual was in fact a U.S. citizen, relying instead on the individual's SF-86 and subsequent polygraph examination.⁷⁸⁸ Only when the individual applied in 2010 for U.S. citizenship with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS), which in turn requested documentation from USSS, did USSS become aware of the issue.⁷⁸⁹ While USCIS ultimately determined the lack of citizenship resulted from a past error, and subsequently approved the individual's application for U.S. citizenship, it is concerning that USSS did not verify the individual's citizenship when he was hired.⁷⁹⁰ ⁷⁸⁴ Notes from [REDACTED] meeting with [USSS leadership] ([REDACTED]), 2015). Note that the term "positions" is derived from the internal USSS designation "PIN," adopted in the agency in the late 1980s. It is not exactly the same as a Full-Time Equivalent (FTE), the budget concept used by Congress and the Office of Management and Budget, although it is roughly similar.

B. 2013 Adoption of New Hiring System

i. Implementation

FINDING: In 2013, USSS discarded applications from 400-600 qualified applicants.

The Protective Mission Panel report states: “When the government sequester took effect, the Service made the decision to stop hiring new officers and agents, resulting in a failure to push new classes through training and into the field.”⁷⁹¹ During the course of its investigation, the Committee learned that hiring officers and agents stopped in fiscal year 2011 when USSS began planning for severe future budget cuts, and it lasted through fiscal year 2013 until the budget outlook improved.⁷⁹² As a result, the funds Congress authorized for training classes in those years were diverted to other areas.⁷⁹³

In 2011, during the hiring freeze, then-Assistant Director for Human Resources and Training Alvin “A.T.” Smith initiated a move toward a new hiring system. The system was believed by some to have been supported by then-Director Julia Pierson. At the time, local field offices coordinated USSS hiring through the screening of applicants, as opposed to relying on applicants’ self-assessments submitted online. Smith initiated a change to instead use the federal hiring portal, USAJobs, for USSS’s hiring process.⁷⁹⁴ The process was completed in 2013, by which point Smith was serving as Deputy Director.⁷⁹⁵

USSS personnel told Committee staff that USSS’s Security Clearance Division (SCD) historically maintained a “hold shelf” of several hundred applications that it drew upon to offer applicants seats in training classes as openings arose.⁷⁹⁶ The hold shelf contained information on applicants for whom USSS had completed the entire security vetting process—security interview, polygraph examination, and background investigation. SCD maintained and managed the hold shelf throughout the hiring freeze, and in 2013, it consisted of approximately 400 to 600 applicants. Yet as USSS implemented a new hiring process that year, USSS leadership directed

⁷⁹⁴ The finished product directs applicants from USAJobs to an online portal known as “Career Connector.”

⁷⁹⁵ It is unclear what further problems existed in the Human Capital Division at this time. In July 2013, the Chief of USSS’s Human Capital Division (HCD), Deborah Eldredge, moved to DHS. Eldredge Tr., supra note 375, at 8-9. The month before, in June 2013, an anonymous letter signed ‘the People of HCD’ and delivered to the Office of the Director alleged poor management and leadership in HCD and urged careful consideration in selecting the next Chief of HCD. The resulting inquiry by the Inspections Division revealed “evidence of dysfunctional senior and mid-level management” and numerous other issues. Inspection Div., U.S. Secret Service, Fact-finding Inquiry Case Report Details, Case Number 190-872-13-026 (opened Nov. 12, 2013), at 1. Further, an Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAIC) of HCD was involved in the misuse of a government-owned vehicle. Inspection Div., U.S. Secret Service, Special Investigation Case Report Details, Case Number 190-805-0000617 (opened Dec. 9, 2013), at 1. The ASAIC received a letter of reprimand. that all the applications on the hold shelf be tossed out.⁷⁹⁷ Thus, as USSS began to hire again, the agency had no applicants to choose from who had already been through the vetting process.

Then-SCD Chief Robin DeProspero-Philpot told Committee staff that she objected to tossing out the hold shelf:

[W]hen the new process was implemented in the spring of 2013, we basically had to start over from scratch with nobody. I think we had a few veterans.⁷⁹⁸

I would have said you leave those people on the shelf and as soon as the new process goes through, you make them do whatever is involved in the new process, and then we hire these people. And in the meantime then you set aside 6 to 9 months to sit down here and tell the field office, don't go to this USA Jobs. Because my primary thing was I knew that if you went to this USA Jobs it was just going to bring in thousands of applicants[.]⁷⁹⁹

Unlike the former hiring process, SCD did not have the opportunity to evaluate an individual's eligibility to hold a security clearance until the second half of the process, known as "Phase 2," where a conditional job offer is extended. Thus, according to DeProspero-Philpot:

[W]e were informed of classes starting in the latter half of fiscal year 2013, and we did not have any kind of pool. And so it was process, process, process as fast as you possibly can.⁸⁰⁰

2013 was when it got pretty crazy because, again, we started with, you know, very, very, very minimal, minimal, minimal people. And this was when the new process was going to start, and I was extremely concerned because of the timeline that it was going to take the new applicants from the new process to get into phase 2. . . . [W]e were starting to hear that we were going to be hiring in fiscal year 2014. So I kept waiting for applicants to get to SCD, my division's door for phase 2, and it wasn't happening. But yet there were classes coming up in fiscal year 2014. And when you are looking down at 3, 4, 5 months and you're going to start hiring classes on an aggressive level, I kept saying, we're never going to make it, we're never going to make it, we're never going to make it.⁸⁰¹

ii. Resulting Decline in Quality of Candidates

FINDING: USSS's current hiring process invests significant resources in applicants who may not be eligible to receive a security clearance.

The new hiring process had a direct negative effect on USSS's ability to hire quality candidates and remain fully staffed. In its report, the Panel noted:

Unfortunately, the Secret Service's hiring process in recent years has not been smooth; indeed, it is one reason why the Service does not have sufficient personnel today. The Service changed its hiring process in 2013, resulting in more applicants but a less effective process at identifying strong candidates. The agency itself reports that despite receiving thousands of applications, it has regularly taken twelve months to on-board a special agent; among other things, more than half of applicants fail the polygraph and are unable to receive the necessary security clearances.⁸⁰²

According to USSS personnel, the new hiring process resulted in an applicant pool much less qualified than under the old system, when USSS invested more time in cultivating applicants in the law enforcement community. DeProspero-Philpot stated, "I honestly don't feel that . . . this process targets the right person,"⁸⁰³ She continued, "I think the new process allows more individuals who do not have a true focus on getting a career in Federal law enforcement. I think there are so many individuals that are out there shotgunning their resume for any position that there's an opening for."⁸⁰⁴ It does not help that, instead of spending the time to target qualified applicants, USSS advertises for open positions on the back of their government vehicles.

Under the new hiring process, the steps in which the greatest number of applicants are eliminated from consideration, including the polygraph and background check, do not occur until Phase 2—later in the process than under the previous system. By this point, USSS has invested significant resources and months of time in processing the application. USSS personnel unofficially told the Committee that polygraph failure rates used to be about 35 percent for special agent applicants and 40 percent for UD officer applicants.⁸⁰⁵ According to USSS human resources personnel, currently 50 percent of special agent applicants and 60 percent of UD officer applicants fail the polygraph.⁸⁰⁶ Other USSS personnel put the numbers over the past couple of years even higher, varying from 60-80 percent.⁸⁰⁷ In DeProspero-Philpot’s words, SCD feels like a “waste treatment facility” because of the responsibility of sifting out clearly unqualified candidates.⁸⁰⁸ DeProspero-Philpot told Committee staff:

[T]he quality of applicants that we are processing has gone down. It’s been quite eye opening to me, compared to the old process, that some individuals can get through this entire process and then get to the background stage. In other words, in the old process where I said there was a 30, 35, 40 percent rejection rate for the polygraph, now we’ve climbed to approximately 60 to 70 percent at any given time. In order to pass that, you would think, wow, you've got a good candidate if you've gone through this entire process. But now we're getting into—now we go to the background investigation on some of these individuals. We go out and we do interviews of their current and/or previous employers and that's where we're getting derogatory information. They're horrible employees. They have a lot of problems with their employment. So it's just amazing. That's amazing to me.⁸⁰⁹

According to data provided by USSS to the Committee near the end of fiscal year 2015, four percent of special agent applicants received a conditional job offer.⁸¹⁰ Remarkably, of the four percent that received a conditional job offer, only 1 percent were hired.⁸¹¹ The numbers are slightly higher for the UD: fifteen percent of applicants received a conditional job offer, and of those, two percent were hired.⁸¹² These numbers track with the numbers from fiscal year 2014, although a slightly higher percentage of those who received conditional offers were hired (nine percent of special agents, and eleven percent of UD officers).⁸¹³ That so many individuals would receive conditional offers but never actually make it through the process to be hired suggests extraordinarily deep-rooted problems with the USSS hiring process.

Notwithstanding USSS's attempts to advertise openings on the back of some of its vehicles, the availability of positions within USSS is not always clear. The website provided on the back of some vehicles provides descriptions for the positions of special agents, UD officers, APT staff, and special officers. However, the link on that section of the website for "Opportunities" only lists a limited number of positions.⁸¹⁴

Issues such as these in the hiring system may result in USSS employees lacking confidence in the employees the agency does hire. According to the 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey, USSS employees increasingly believe that their work unit is not able to recruit people with the right skills, with only 25.3 percent believing that their unit is able to recruit people with the right skills.⁸¹⁵

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should strongly consider incorporating interviews earlier in the application process to filter out low-quality candidates and those unlikely to receive a security clearance.

C. Security Clearance Process

FINDING: USSS’s current process for expediting the security clearance process may result in increased risks to national security.

All USSS employees are required to hold a Top Secret/Sensitive Compartmented Information clearance. USSS conducts its own security clearance process from beginning to end, not relying on the Office of Personnel Management or any other agency to conduct any portion of the process.

As part of its investigation, the Committee interviewed former SCD Chief Robin DeProspero-Philpot. As described above, Robin DeProspero-Philpot joined USSS in 1979. She served as a security officer and SCD Chief, a GS-15 position, from May 2004 to July 2015.⁸¹⁶ Prior to that, she served as Chief of the Personnel Security Branch, a branch of SCD which oversees all background investigations for USSS security clearances.⁸¹⁷

SCD has been short-staffed since at least fiscal year 2008.⁸¹⁸ In conjunction with those shortages, DeProspero-Philpot described to Committee staff how the 2013 change to the hiring system and the subsequent push to “hire, hire, hire” has had a detrimental effect on USSS’s process of issuing security clearances and USSS’s ability to minimize risks to national security. As discussed below, she described specific ways in which she believes USSS leadership pressured SCD to, as she said, “cut corners” in its process.

⁸¹⁶ DeProspero-Philpot Tr., supra note 321, at 7.

⁸¹⁸ Workforce Planning Office, U.S. Secret Service, Summary: Workload Study for the Office of Human Resource and Training, Security Clearance Division, FY 2008, at 2 [hereinafter Workforce Planning Office FY 2008].

SCD is not the only component of USSS to be consistently understaffed in recent years; yet unlike operational components, failure to properly staff SCD impacts the processing of clearances necessary to staff the rest of the agency. DeProspero-Philpot expressed deep concerns about the developments at USSS affecting SCD, and also indicated that she believes there are widespread concerns within SCD.⁸¹⁹ DeProspero-Philpot filed her concerns with USSS's Office of Inspection.⁸²⁰ DHS OIG also opened an investigation into the matter.⁸²¹

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should take care to minimize risks to national security throughout the hiring process.

i. Security Clearance Division Understaffing

FINDING: USSS's Security Clearance Division has been understaffed for years, despite warnings from external reviewers.

According to DeProspero-Philpot, for approximately twenty years between 1995 and 2015, SCD requested additional manpower.⁸²² Instead, a study by USSS's Workforce Planning Office in fiscal year 2009 found that SCD had seen a sharp decline in growth, and outlined the potential adverse implications.⁸²³

Since SCD is largely involved with many of the tasks associated with bringing new employees on-board, a trend of the nature described above could potentially affect SCD's ability to process new employees in a timely and accurate manner. This is due to an immediate increase in workload for SCD based on a continuous increase in service-wide growth.

DeProspero-Philpot stated that she documented her requests for more SCD resources through memos in both 2014 and 2015.⁸²⁴ In January 2015, the memo she sent her supervisors reads:

Every audit that has been conducted during the last 7-8 years, and reported to date (DHS [Security Compliance Reviews], USSS Office Inspections, OIG investigations, [Office of Personnel Management], [Office of the Director of National Intelligence], and [Information Security Oversight Office] audits, in addition to separating employee interviews), has reiterated the fact that the USSS is inadequately staffing its Office of Security (SCD) that is responsible for the oversight and compliance of standards that relate to the safeguarding of personnel, information, facilities, and resources for USSS.⁸²⁵

The memo goes on to describe USSS's resources in comparison with other agencies in DHS:

To define the Security Clearance Division as being inadequately staffed and under-resourced is an understatement. The USSS's SCD manages more classified programs, and processes more classified equities[,] than any other DHS component. In addition, all USSS employees require a Top Secret clearance, with upwards of 35-40% requiring access to Sensitive Compartmented Information (SCI). No other DHS component requires all of its employees to be eligible for a Top Secret security clearance. Yet, SCD is operating at only a fraction of the number of employees and resources than [sic] any other DHS component or comparable federal agency.⁸²⁶

The memo noted the history of compliance reviews of SCD:

The USSS has undergone three separate DHS Security Compliance Reviews (SCRs) within the last 5 years where all areas of security were evaluated (November, 2009, July, 2012, and July, 2014 respectively). As a result of each review, an official synopsis was submitted to the Secretary of DHS, the DHS Executive Management Chain, and to former Directors Sullivan and Pierson, wherein . . . it was iterated that "SCD continues to lack sufficient human capital to manage USSS security programs. . . . [I]t would benefit the USSS if additional security specialists were hired to absorb the heavy workload being currently performed by SCD" "This is especially prudent for an agency comparable to the size of the USSS and for an agency that possesses the largest number of Sensitive But Unclassified (SBU), Classified National Security Information (CNSI), and Sensitive Compartmented Information (SCI) programs within the entire Department."⁸²⁷

The memo also noted that DHS had cited USSS for failing to meet minimum physical security compliance standards:

It was further noted as a result of the SCR's that the USSS, who [sic] does physical security and protection as a primary mission, failed to meet DHS's and the Inter Security Committee (ISC) government-wide physical security standards; citing that the USSS is not meeting minimum physical security compliance standards due to the lack of support under the [Chief Security Officer], a misaligned organization of security responsibilities within the agency's overall organizational structure, and the simple fact that the USSS had yet to establish a formal physical security program.⁸²⁸

DeProspero-Philpot told the Committee that unlike in 2014, her request in January 2015 for more employees was approved. However, she said that by September 2015 she still had not seen an additional new employee.⁸²⁹

RECOMMENDATION: USSS must adequately staff the Security Clearance Division.

ii. Restructuring of Security Clearance Division

FINDING: Keeping USSS's Security Clearance Division under Human Resources may be counterproductive to maintaining security at the agency.

DHS reviews of USSS's security programs cited USSS's "misaligned organization of security responsibilities within the agency's overall organizational structure."⁸³⁰ DeProspero-Philpot, a GS-15 who has been SES-eligible for over seven years, explained:

I was the first non-1811 chief of my division in its history. . . . I think former Director Basham recognized that there were certain positions in the agency that needed continuity and consistency. You could not bring a new SAIC in there every 2-1/2, 3 years that wanted to reinvent the wheel.⁸³¹

As noted in the section above on APT morale, top-level management over SCD shifted regularly, with seven different Assistant Directors for Human Resources and Training in the past ten years.

DeProspero-Philpot contrasted her experience with those holding the Deputy Assistant Director and Assistant Director positions:

I, as a chief of Personnel Security Branch . . . knew security and I had the subject matter expertise and the experience I think that is what is missing right now when it comes to certain positions in the Secret Service. Case in point, my immediate management. You have three 1811s that have no experience or specialized experience in HR or security. You have an assistant director, that oversees the [Chief Human Capital Officer] for the agency, with no HR experience. . . . And you have an assistant director who oversees a chief security officer, who has no security experience.

⁸³¹ DeProspero-Philpot Tr., supra note 321, at 132.

And these three individuals now oversee this entire hiring and security. And you have individuals, non-1811s, such as me and quite a few other individuals, who have that experience, but they don't want to listen.⁸³²

[T]he vast majority of people do not think like we do as security professionals. We are always constantly, "What if? What if? What if?"⁸³³

This is where I go back to having the appropriate people managing some of these divisions when they don't have any experience.⁸³⁴

DeProspero-Philpot also noted the problems with locating the security officer under human resources:

[M]y division should never have stayed under HUM [Human Resources]. That is a true conflict. . . . I said, "It's not my division's mission to hire people. We don't hire people. We determine eligibility for access to classified information. That is a requirement for someone to be hired, but we don't hire." And when you have HR and security under the same directorate, there is going to be a conflict. Because, primarily, . . . their mission is to hire a well-qualified, diverse workforce.⁸³⁵

She further explained:

[A.] It was a lack of exposure to the importance of our mission. Because when you look at the overall directorate of HUM, it's HR. And so there was, you know, such priorities as the learning management system, the merit promotion process. It was more or less all the priorities were geared towards the HR functions. And, again, our Office of Security, we were the—you know, we liked to call ourselves the bastard children of the directorate. . . . And, to be quite honest with you, you know, there are certain elements of the agency that look at us and, when we try to bring up the what-if scenarios, such as our counterintelligence and our security clearance processes—you know, in my former role, I was on the Security Executive Agent Committee and met with the DNI on a quarterly basis, and I went to various security conferences, and you realize the potential threats . . . [W]ith our protective mission, you would think that it would be looked upon, what we do, as very, very, very significant and important. . . . So that was more or less the frustration that I had, that HR just did not think like security professionals. And that was just very evident to me, that we were not – we were not paid attention to.

Q. So do you feel that HR took your security concerns seriously enough?

A. No. They don't.

Q. Just to be clear, that's both in the present as well as even in the past?

A. Yes.

Q. 2015 and before?

A. Yes.⁸³⁶

[A.] I think the alignment was incredibly wrong. We needed focus, we needed exposure, we needed support. And we just did not get that.⁸³⁷

In 2015, current Office of Human Resources and Training management began conducting a restructuring of SCD. According to DeProspero-Philpot, that has resulted in specific changes to the security clearance process which fail to minimize the risks to national security. Several of these changes are described in the sections below.

Further, DeProspero-Philpot stated that restructuring a security office is governed by DHS instructions and directives which require USSS to collaborate with the DHS Office of the Chief Security Officer in hiring a Chief Security Officer.⁸³⁸ Yet according to DeProspero-Philpot, when she informed the Chief of DHS's Security Compliance Review Unit Michael Ness of the changes, he was unaware of the requirements:

I proceeded to tell him what was happening. And he said, really? Well, he said, you make sure that you let me know on our—when we come in and do our pre-brief, to let me know what has changed. And I said, okay.

⁸³⁷ Id. at 148.

⁸³⁸ Id. at 92-93.

And I said, do you know whether or not they consulted about this? He said, absolutely not.⁸³⁹

DeProspero-Philpot recommended restructuring SCD by moving it under USSS's Chief Operating Officer:

[A.] [B]eing that our division is charged with all the various security disciplines and it kind of touches all of the directorates, I think that we would best be served under the Chief Operating Officer right now.

Q. Okay.

A. As a separate entity under a Chief Security Officer with security experience. . . . I just think, you know, being a separate entity—you know, if you look at the vast majority of security offices in the Federal Government, either it resides under the Office of Internal Affairs or Office of Professional Responsibility or as a separate entity under very, very high-level management.⁸⁴⁰

[A.] Then you would have a Chief Security Officer who dealt directly with that COO to advise on upcoming mandates, any kind of obstacles, any potential issues that are occurring from over the purview of my division, that type of thing.⁸⁴¹

iii. Overall Timeline for Clearances

FINDING: USSS practice for processing security clearances appears to result in the agency issuing security clearances three times faster than the pace recommended by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence.

Government-wide, all applicants for security clearances with the federal government must complete Standard Form 86 (SF-86).⁸⁴² Once an applicant for employment with USSS completes an SF-86, SCD conducts an initial review of the form, then assigns it to a local USSS field office to conduct a security interview of the applicant.⁸⁴³ An interview is conducted by a special agent in the field office. Upon conducting the interview, the field office provides the results to SCD to review.⁸⁴⁴ If SCD approves an applicant moving beyond the security interview stage, the applicant is then administered a full-scope polygraph examination, also usually at a local USSS field office.⁸⁴⁵ The results of those examinations are provided to the Forensic Services Division at USSS headquarters for quality control, then once again to SCD for review.⁸⁴⁶ At that stage, if the applicant is successfully approved to continue in the process, SCD initiates the background investigation.⁸⁴⁷

Background investigations at USSS are parceled out into several elements: SCD scopes out the investigation, determines which cities need to be visited (in order to verify information regarding the applicant's birth, family, education, employers, etc.), and then assigns the elements to various local field offices to investigate.⁸⁴⁸ This could result in as many as 25 different field offices conducting elements of the investigation.⁸⁴⁹ Once initial investigation results come back from USSS field offices, SCD finalizes the background investigation by conducting various checks of federal criminal and other databases.

Once USSS has conducted initial checks, an applicant's file goes before the aforementioned hiring panel. If the applicant is approved by the hiring panel, USSS's practice is to offer the applicant space in the next training class at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in Glynco, Georgia. However, the offer is contingent upon the final checks of the background investigation yielding non-adverse results while the individual is in training, so the new employee may be issued a security clearance. USSS calls this practice "hiring contingent."

USSS told the Committee that Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI) guidelines provide a target of 114 days to complete a security clearance investigation, from initiation to adjudication.⁸⁵⁰ DeProspero-Philpot emphasized the ODNI timelines are for a clean case.⁸⁵¹ However, she said USSS leadership provides SCD with only a third of that time to complete their work.⁸⁵²

According to DeProspero-Philpot, this directive impacts all branches of SCD. She stated of the Counterintelligence Branch:

I know they are being rushed. You know, if you have a file that's this thick, you have never seen this file before, and now all of a sudden someone within the Personnel Security Branch is asking you to take a look at this and make a counterintelligence assessment on this case, it's not going to take you an hour to do this; it's going to take you several hours to do that. And Personnel Security Branch is getting rushed by the [Human Resources] directorate, "Hey, get this person to the hiring panel." . . . [I]t's a mess, you know. And then now my counterintelligence branch chief or analyst is feeling that pressure to get it done.⁸⁵³

As DeProspero-Philpot put it, after repeatedly communicating to USSS management that SCD "could not maintain the pace,"⁸⁵⁴ SCD arrived at the conclusion that "[a]ll they care about is butts in seats."⁸⁵⁵

DeProspero-Philpot suggested that a good security clearance background check should take approximately 120 days.⁸⁵⁶ DeProspero-Philpot summed up: "[Y]ou have to allow ample enough time to ensure that the risk of hiring anybody is brought down to a minimum level."⁸⁵⁷ She further explained:

Q. So what you're saying . . . is that a higher quality investigation would further minimize the risks to national security once somebody is actually approved?

A. Correct.

Q. That would be ideal?

A. Correct.⁸⁵⁸

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should allow at least as much time as the 114-day ODNI timeline for issuing security clearances.

iv. Investigation Timelines for Local Field Offices

FINDING: USSS may have afforded special agents as little as three to ten days to conduct security clearance background investigations.

Special agents in local field offices are given fourteen days to complete the initial security interview. Agents receive the same amount of time to complete whatever elements of the background investigation they are subsequently assigned. Individual agents usually handle multiple applications and are thus conducting the investigations concurrently. DeProspero-Philpot noted this duty is not the primary assignment any special agent has:

[T]hose are 1811s, the vast majority of them. They have protective assignments. Right now they're probably going up to the U.N. They do have collateral duties than primarily the background investigation. . . . [T]hey don't just sit there and wait for updates and background investigations to come in.⁸⁵⁹

DeProspero-Philpot expressed concerns with the length of time agents receive for both stages of this process (the security interview as well as the background investigations). DeProspero-Philpot stated:

That investigator, when they are getting ready to do a security interview, again, fitting these other duties in, they have to review that entire packet of forms. And I think if you have ever filled out an [SF-86], it's 127 pages now. . . . You want to be able to conduct a good security interview, it should take anywhere from 2 to 3 hours because you are trying to develop leads, number one. You're trying to ensure the veracity of the applicant's form and obtain any kind of additional information, make sure that this individual knows that . . . this interview is done under sworn declaration. And integrity is a big part of having a clearance.⁸⁶⁰

Therefore, once the security interview is assigned out to the field, DeProspero-Philpot recommended giving agents approximately one month for the interview to be reviewed, conducted, and sent back to SCD.⁸⁶¹

Similarly, DeProspero-Philpot recommended a significantly lengthier window for the background investigation:

We've got background investigations that are going out with a 14-day due date. Now, are the field offices actually spending 14 days doing that? I highly doubt it. So that impacts the quality of the investigation. . . . [B]ack in the good old days, these offices were given 45 to 60 days to do their background investigations. And the minute that they developed questionable information, they would go out and they would attempt to develop leads to fully, fully mitigate any type of questionable information. . . . I would get a call from an agent out in the field going: There's just something not here that . . . I can't put my finger on it. Is it okay, have you got anything else, do you have any other information? . . . What do you think I should do? That's where the Personnel Security side of the house, our experience, we could say: Well, maybe we can go down this road. Let's start, maybe I can review this, I'll get back to you. . . . [T]hat's the type of conversations, discussions that are not taking place right now because of that "get it done, get it done, get it done." I'm not saying they're cutting any corners. They're getting done exactly what we told them to do. But, you know, more could be done.⁸⁶²

DeProspero-Philpot also indicated that this year USSS leadership tried to additionally shorten the amount of time given to field offices to conduct background investigations:

I was notified in January of this year by Deputy Assistant Director Fred Sellers that they wanted to reduce the due date for or the completion time for investigations field portion to 10 days. I strongly recommended against that. I advised him that the quality was going to suffer and that I truly, honestly did not believe that the field could comply with the 10-day due date background, that I was going to be overrun with what we call requests for extensions, and that I was very concerned from a security standpoint. He advised to me that the front office wanted that . . . [m]eaning the Director and Deputy Director wanted that. And then I said to him well, of course, if that's what they want, then we will comply. But I want to go on record that I strongly am opposed to this.⁸⁶³

DeProspero-Philpot said USSS usually approved requests for extensions.⁸⁶⁴ However, providing such a short timetable increases the likelihood that corners will be cut. Not until after the news broke that many UD officers did not have clearances did USSS revert back to the 14-day timeframe.⁸⁶⁵

Since much of the background investigation process is conducted in the field, its management is actually conducted under the Office of Investigations, not the Office of Human Resources and Training. The Committee received an allegation that in late February 2015, all local field office SAICs across the country received an email from James Helminski, a Deputy Assistant Director in the Office of Investigations. Helminski allegedly indicated that since an upcoming training class in March needed to be filled, all background investigations needed to be expedited to 3 days. DeProspero-Philpot said she was not aware of this email and had not given approval for it.⁸⁶⁶ The shortened timeframe allegedly resulted in various field offices being unable to resolve simple questions such as whether dual citizens had renounced their foreign nationality, or to visit local police offices to resolve derogatory information from the SF-86.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should provide sufficient time for special agents to conduct clearance background investigations.

v. Consistency for Former Employees

FINDING: USSS re-hiring of former employees without requiring them to undergo an updated physical examination, polygraph, or background investigation poses security risks.

USSS historically maintained a policy that, if any of its personnel left the agency for more than a year, re-hiring them required recompleting certain vetting procedures. Even if a former employee maintained a security clearance with another agency during their separation from USSS, the agency nevertheless completed an updated physical examination, polygraph, and background investigation to ensure that no additional problems had developed during the time of separation.⁸⁶⁷ Earlier this year, USSS eliminated this policy.⁸⁶⁸ According to DeProspero-Philpot, removing these requirements was a mistake:

[I]f you were gone longer than a year, we would repolygraph you to make sure that there were no red flag issues there. And if necessary, we would update your background investigation. We would definitely want to know why you left your other employment, that type of thing.⁸⁶⁹

Whether or not the other agency hired you under the reciprocity laws, that's one thing. But now we're talking as to whether or not you are medically eligible to perform the duties of an agent. And, again, Secret Service policy is that if you leave the Secret Service and you've been gone longer than a year you are required to retake a polygraph examination.⁸⁷⁰

[Y]ou don't know what has happened however long that they've been gone. . . . [Y]ou have no idea why they are leaving their previous employment. I mean, if they left under bad circumstances, that's something that I would want to check into. . . . [Y]ou would have had information as to the polygraph, you would have had information as to whether or not they are still medically eligible to come back onboard, and we would definitely want to have a background investigation, at least do interviews with respect to their recent employment.⁸⁷¹

Despite DeProspero-Philpot's opposition, in 2015 at least six applicants have been re-hired by USSS without being required to go through any of the security or medical vetting process.⁸⁷² DeProspero-Philpot did not know if these six individuals have any relationships with existing USSS personnel.⁸⁷³

RECOMMENDATION: Re-hired employees at USSS should receive an updated physical examination, polygraph, and background investigation.

vi. Database Name Checks

FINDING: USSS's hiring panel does not appear to always have access to the results of FBI background checks.

DHS Personnel Suitability and Security guidelines require that all component agencies conduct an investigative name check of FBI databases.⁸⁷⁴ DeProspero-Philpot said of the investigative process:

It is mandatory that you conduct an FBI investigative name check. And that check primarily is one of those checks that produces the most if there's going to be questionable or derogatory information. So it had been my policy always to not hire anything contingent if we had those checks outstanding.⁸⁷⁵

Yet, DeProspero-Philpot told the Committee that in the spring of 2015, USSS began "hiring contingent" even prior to receiving the results of the FBI name check:

Q. And were there ever pressures to try and cut any corners in that process?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us more about that?

- A. The FBI investigative name check that I mentioned. In order to contingent-hire people, I did not want my staff to put before a hiring panel any applicant where we had not received the FBI investigative name checks back on either them and/or their foreign-born contacts or relatives.
- Q. But it happened anyway?
- A. It did.
- Q. In just one case or multiple cases?
- A. It depends on the timeframe. There were definitely initially . . . times when I was asked whether or not, would it be a security risk to present some of these, some of them. I said yes, because they had a heavy foreign nexus. And I was told that . . . [i]t was eight people that were in a class thus far. They wanted to hire at least a half a class. And so I was told to make sure that those four cases went before the hiring panel on the following Monday morning.⁸⁷⁶

Although USSS cancelled that particular training class, the issue came up again after news of the incomplete clearances broke in June.⁸⁷⁷ Deputy Director Craig Magaw raised with DeProspero-Philpot the ten-day due date for the background investigation, as well as the new practice of bringing candidates before the hiring panel without having the results of the FBI name check.⁸⁷⁸ Magaw first asked who told directed her to change these measures.⁸⁷⁹ Then, according to DeProspero-Philpot, “[H]e asked me my personal opinion, do you see that as a security risk? I said I do.”⁸⁸⁰ Notwithstanding what she told the Deputy Director, a few weeks later DeProspero-Philpot received instructions that, effective immediately, all files were to go before the hiring panel prior to USSS receiving the results of the FBI investigative name check.⁸⁸¹

vii. Changes to USSS Hiring Panel

As described above, USSS utilizes a hiring panel to make final decisions on new hires at the agency. For many years, DeProspero-Philpot held a seat on the hiring panel, which was historically composed of five or six individuals, depending on the time period.⁸⁸² When the panel had six voters, the Assistant Director of Human Resources and Training broke a tie if necessary.⁸⁸³

DeProspero-Philpot told the Committee that, since the implementation of the new hiring system in 2013, the number of individuals not making it past the hiring panel had “significantly increased.”⁸⁸⁴ Yet in March 2015, USSS reduced the panel to three voters and removed DeProspero-Philpot.⁸⁸⁵ DeProspero-Philpot believed her demotion and removal from the hiring panel was the result of her objections about security risks.⁸⁸⁶ No one has represented SCD on the panel since DeProspero-Philpot’s removal,⁸⁸⁷ and a higher percentage of applications have been approved for hire by the panel.⁸⁸⁸

DeProspero-Philpot also told the Committee that Deputy Assistant Director Fred Sellers re-presented several rejected applications to the smaller panel.⁸⁸⁹ One applicant was even advanced to training after again being rejected by a majority vote of the smaller panel, with Sellers voting in favor of the applicant.⁸⁹⁰ DeProspero-Philpot said of the applicant:

I was very concerned about the derogatory information that was included in the synopsis presented to the hiring panel. . . . [T]he primary reason that I was very concerned was there was information pertaining to this applicant’s potentially putting a gun to his former girlfriend’s head and threatening [her]. . . . [I]f there was an interest in pursuing this applicant, I would have wanted to go out and at least try to interview friends of his, friends of hers, any potential witnesses to any previous or ongoing domestic problems between the two of them before we would even entertain putting him in a class. And from what I saw on the synopsis, there had been no follow-up on that investigation.⁸⁹¹

DeProspero-Philpot did not know why the individual was placed in a training class,⁸⁹² which violated the historical practice that the majority vote of the panel prevailed.⁸⁹³ However, she

viii. Employees on Job without Clearances

FINDING: At times, USSS has allowed agents, officers, and APT staff to begin their service without having a fully processed security clearance.

As outlined above, each applicant to USSS is “hired contingent,” meaning that a job offer is made to an applicant who begins training prior to receiving a security clearance. Training at FLETC takes approximately eight to nine weeks, depending on the course; thereafter, USSS officers and special agents receive position-specific training at USSS’s James J. Rowley Training Center in Beltsville, Maryland. USSS told the Committee that it is able to “hire contingent” because the agency can still make a final determination of eligibility for a security clearance while an individual is in training. Yet despite it being a requirement for employment at USSS that an individual hold a security clearance (not just be eligible for one), the agency has allowed its employees to begin service without holding a clearance.

According to press reports, in early June 2015, whistleblowers alleged that Uniformed Division officers finished training, received a posting at the White House, and gained access to classified information—all without having been issued their security clearances.⁸⁹⁵ Allegedly, USSS removed one UD officer from duty in the West Wing after discovering he did not hold a security clearance.

On June 5, 2015, Government Operations Subcommittee Chairman Mark Meadows spoke with Director Clancy, who acknowledged that the practice of posting uncleared UD officers at the White House dated back to 2013. On June 9, 2015, the Washington Post reported that a USSS official said, “Clancy promised to fix the problem as soon as possible.”⁸⁹⁶ The same day, a document provided by USSS to Congress indicated that some 133 USSS employees—over eleven dozen—lacked security clearances despite completing training. The number included APT staff, special agents, and UD officers posted both at the White House and the Vice President’s residence.⁸⁹⁷

DeProspero-Philpot said that the backlog resulted from SCD being directed to purely focus on getting individuals into training classes, rather than focusing its resources on the other end of the process by finalizing clearances for the individuals who come out of those classes.⁸⁹⁸ DeProspero-Philpot said “we were told in no uncertain terms that our first priority was to process these applicants and hire them—hire, hire, hire, hire.”⁸⁹⁹ This management directive resulted in a pile of clearance applications for which all investigating had been completed, but which had not been adjudicated so the individual formally received a security clearance. According to DeProspero-Philpot:

With respect to what happened with the Uniformed Division officers . . . what ended up happening was we hired those individuals contingent. In the vast, vast majority of those cases, the pending information had come into my branch, and it was more or less—and I’m being demonstrative here—”Okay, everything is in. Good. Good to go for a TS clearance. Put it over here in this pile.” Because my branch is getting the constant message of: “Forget about that. Hire, hire, hire.”

So this is over here pending a TS, but, in actuality, they have been favorably adjudicated. Because it’s not just like, “Okay, good, issue the TS.” There is probably a good hour to an hour and a half of administrative-type duties that go into closing out a case and issuing the TS clearance. You have to update databases. You have to finalize typing a report. You have to strip out the file; again, update databases, type up things, issue the clearance, so on and so forth. So that’s a lot of work. It’s important work, but it takes time. And it was a constant message of hire, hire, hire. So we’re constantly trying to open backgrounds. And, again, the strongest emphasis I can make is that we did not have enough people to do this. I needed twice as many people to do this.⁹⁰⁰

Because SCD only needed to complete these administrative duties before issuing the clearances, SCD “adjudicated” seventy files on the weekend on June 6-7, 2015.⁹⁰¹ The next week SCD adjudicated and processed the remaining sixty-three, which included special agents, APT staff, and UD officers assigned to the White House, the Vice President’s residence, and various foreign embassies.⁹⁰²

Within weeks of the public revelations about clearances, on July 10, 2015, Director Clancy sent Subcommittee Chairman Meadows a follow-up letter stating that “none of the Officers had access to or participated in any meetings involving the dissemination of information classified as TS/SCI.”⁹⁰³ Director Clancy noted “[a]s a matter of policy and practice, information classified as TS/SCI is not authorized to be discussed outside of an approved Secure

Compartmented Information Facility (SCIF).⁹⁰⁴ Yet Clancy's letter glaringly omitted mention of information classified Secret or even Top Secret, which do not require being discussed in a SCIF. DeProspero-Philpot acknowledged that agents and officers holding clearances were frequently exposed to Secret and Top Secret information,⁹⁰⁵ and stated, "A SCIF is only required when you're discussing SCI information. So when it's a collateral, TS, or Secret, then the precautions are made as to how you are relaying that information."⁹⁰⁶ Such precautions include talking in an area that is routinely swept—such as the West Wing of the White House. As the Washington Post noted, "Agents and officers, as part of their work guarding the White House grounds and protecting the president and top aides, are sometimes present for meetings and briefings where classified information is discussed."⁹⁰⁷

The letter also seemed to ignore the realities of working at the White House, where White House staff would not necessarily know which USSS officers hold clearances and which don't—particularly since it is widely understood that USSS personnel hold TS/SCI clearances as a condition of their employment.

Such confusion would apparently not be limited to White House staff. DeProspero-Philpot said that SCD relies on the management of USSS divisions to communicate to the proper supervisors which employees had not yet received their security clearances.⁹⁰⁸ The Committee's investigation suggests that this information was not being properly conveyed. According to DeProspero-Philpot:

[I]n the beginning of May, I know that there was a Uniformed Division officer who apparently was acting as the spokesman for some other Uniformed Division officers who contacted my division and talked to my ASAIC and said: I know that I don't have a clearance, and I think I'm being exposed to classified information.

My ASAIC then asked him: Did you tell your supervisor? And that employee basically stated: I did. There was a comment made that: Do you have a gun? Do you have a badge? Yes. Well, then, you're cleared.⁹⁰⁹

DeProspero-Philpot said that in this particular instance, "Based on what that Uniformed Division officer said, my ASAIC did not feel that [the information in question] was classified."⁹¹⁰ Nevertheless, DeProspero-Philpot acknowledged that this supervisor's belief that having a gun and badge meant someone was cleared was "absolutely" problematic given the responsibility of managers to make sure their personnel are not exposed to classified information.⁹¹¹

Several indications suggest a disconnect between USSS's Office of Human Resources and Training and the UD. DeProspero-Philpot did not know how the UD addresses this issue:

Q. What kind of training do managers get in order to make sure that they're aware of which of their staff have clearances and what the implications of that are?

A. Again, I'm not quite sure exactly what the Office of the Chief of the Uniformed Division has implemented. This is not a new process. We regularly hire people contingent. We give them that memorandum. It's not up to us to implement the procedures; it's them. So I really can't comment on the training. . . . [O]nce we have issued that memorandum . . . we are presuming that you are going through the steps, once you assign someone to a certain post of duty, that you're informing the managers as to, "This person does not have a clearance yet. Make sure that they're not exposed."⁹¹²

DeProspero-Philpot described meetings which suggest leadership for the Office of Human Resources and Training did not know how the UD operated:

My ASAIC and myself had a meeting with Assistant Director Triplett, Deputy Assistant Director Sellers, Deputy Assistant Director Linda Williams. We were talking about some of the initiatives that were going on in my division, and this topic came up. And all I can tell you about that conversation is that Mr. Sellers, as well as Ms. Williams, were former Uniformed Division officers. And at that point, they started to . . . discuss where are these Uniformed Division officers going immediately after graduation? And they [said] something to the effect of: Wow, they are going straight over to the House. You know, why wouldn't they go over to foreign missions. You know, that apparently was somewhat of a change in policy from the 20 years prior or whatever that they had been on UD, that type of thing. Well, what kind of information would they be exposed to if they were over at the House, so on and so forth.⁹¹³

According to DeProspero-Philpot, the group concluded that UD officers "probably would not be exposed to classified information," but apparently this conversation spurred further communication between Human Resources and other parts of the agency. According to the written summary USSS provided to Congress on the clearance issue, on June 1, Assistant Director Triplett “advised[] that in fact there was an issue with some of the Top Secret Clearances for UD Officers and special agents.”⁹¹⁴

Further, the incident described by DeProspero-Philpot took place around the same time as when USSS allegedly removed an officer from duty in the West Wing—if true, a seemingly clear acknowledgement that the UD improperly posted officers without clearances.

In 2016, DHS OIG plans to conduct an inspection of USSS’s practices of hiring and deploying personnel without completing the security clearance process.⁹¹⁵ The Committee looks forward to receiving the findings of this inspection.

RECOMMENDATION: USSS should ensure that all security concerns and administrative checks are settled before an employee is put on duty.

VI. Security Breaches

FINDING: Over the last 10 years, there have been 143 security breaches and attempted security breaches at secured facilities which resulted in an arrest, 13 of which resulted in jail time.

USSS provided the Committee with data regarding attempted or actual security breaches at secured facilities from April 2005 to April 21, 2015.⁹¹⁶ While this data only captured known incidents that resulted in arrests and charges, it is apparent that security incidents occur frequently, and the agency must therefore be prepared to deter and respond to breaches at all times.

Unsurprisingly, the White House is the location of the large majority of security incidents at protected sites.⁹¹⁷

In July 2015, the Secret Service announced that it would install “removable anti-climb feature consisting of sharp metal points” on top of the White House fence in order to “deter and inhibit individuals who may attempt to climb over the fence.”⁹¹⁸ On November 26, 2015, a man was able to scale the fence while carrying a binder, making it past the new fence enhancements, and land on White House grounds.⁹¹⁹ The man then raised his arms and laid down on the ground until he was apprehended.⁹²⁰ At the time, President Obama and his family were inside the White House celebrating Thanksgiving.⁹²¹

Despite the seriousness of committing or attempting a security breach, the vast majority of arrests result in the dismissal of charges or the issuance of a stay away order rather than in jail time. Note that some arrests result in multiple adjudications.

That a large number of those involved in the incidents are mentally ill or intoxicated is likely a significant contributing factor.⁹²³

The Committee’s investigation did not cover issues of prosecution, sentencing, and mental illness related to actual and attempted breaches at protected sites. The Committee believes actual and attempted security breaches merit punishment to the fullest extent of the law.

VII. Reconsideration of Mission

FINDING: USSS's mission has dramatically expanded.

As the Protective Mission Panel reported, the primary mission of USSS is the protection of the President and other elected leaders and foreign dignitaries.⁹²⁴ The agency's dual-mission structure may result in distracting from its primary mission and thus deserves reconsideration. USSS emphasizes that the investigative mission supports the protective mission by developing agents' law enforcement skills. USSS will have to critically weigh when the investigative mission directly contributes to the protective mission or is outweighed by the distraction. USSS is facing massive staffing problems and is consistently pulling agents from around the country to assist with protection, as well as losing agents prematurely as a result of transfers to the Washington, D.C. area. Simultaneously, the threat landscape for both protection and investigations is becoming more complex. Rather than expand non-essential missions during a time of staffing shortages, USSS should focus on protecting the president and other protectees.

1. History of Mission Growth

In order to understand USSS's current dual-mission, it is necessary to understand the origins and growth of the agency. USSS was created in 1865 to investigate counterfeit currency.⁹²⁵ Counterfeit currency was a major problem during the Civil War, when it comprised one-third to one-half of the money in circulation and continued to be widespread even after a national currency was adopted in 1862.⁹²⁶ Counterfeit currency now makes up less than .01 percent of the money in circulation.⁹²⁷ In its early stages, USSS engaged in investigations into the broad category of people committing "frauds against the government," which included the Ku Klux Klan, non-conforming distillers, smugglers, mail robbers, and land frauds.⁹²⁸ USSS conducted espionage activities during the Spanish-American War and World War I and investigated land fraud in the early 1900s.⁹²⁹

In 1894, per his request, USSS began informally protecting President Grover Cleveland on a part-time basis.⁹³⁰ After President McKinley was assassinated in 1901, Congress informally asked for USSS to protect the President, and soon thereafter there was a permanent presence at the White House. In 1906, Congress provided funds for Presidential protection. The scope and nature of protection has continued to grow over time, notably including:

- 1908: Protection of President-elect.
- 1913: Congress permanently authorized Presidential Protection.
- 1917: Congress authorized permanent protection of the President's immediate family.
- 1922: White House Police Force created (precursor to the Uniformed Division); USSS took supervision over in 1930.
- 1961: Protection of former Presidents and their spouses for a reasonable time.
- 1962: Congress authorized statutory protection of the Vice President and Vice President-elect.
- 1965: Congress authorized protection of former Presidents and spouses during their lifetime and minor children up to age sixteen.
- 1968: USSS assigned to protect major Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates.
- 1968: The widows of Presidents until death, or remarriage, and their children until age sixteen receive USSS protection.
- 1970: Size and responsibilities of the White House Police extended to include protection of foreign diplomatic missions in the Washington, DC area, and elsewhere as directed; name changed to Executive Protective Service.
- 1971: Congress authorized USSS protection for visiting foreign heads of state/heads of government, and other official foreign guests, as directed.
- 1976: Congress authorized protection of Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees' spouses within 120 days of the November general election.
- 1977: Executive Protective Service name changed to U.S. Secret Service Uniformed Division (UD).
- 1986: Accompanying spouses of visiting foreign head of state or government are authorized protection by Presidential directive.
- 1986: UD assigned responsibility for the security of the U.S. Treasury Building and grounds.

- 1998: Presidential Decision Directive 62 designated USSS as the lead federal agency to coordinate security at designated National Special Security Events (NSSEs).
- 2003: USSS transferred to Department of Homeland Security.⁹³¹

As threats have changed, the nature of protective activities has evolved. The protection that used to be more akin to “bodyguard” duties now includes advance security surveys, coordination with state and local enforcement entities, intelligence analysis, and advanced technology to address evolving threats.⁹³²

USSS’s investigative mission has also grown substantially. In 1948, the investigative mission expanded from being counterfeit-focused to including additional financial crimes when Congress authorized the investigation of crimes against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, federal land banks, joints-stock land banks, and national farm loan associations.⁹³³ The investigative mission has grown in scope drastically in last thirty years. In 1984, USSS was given authority to investigate computer crimes and credit card fraud; in 1990, given joint jurisdiction with the Department of Justice for investigations related to federally-insured financial institutions; and given increased cyber-crime authority in the 2001 Patriot Act.⁹³⁴ USSS was transferred from the Department of Treasury to the newly created Department of Homeland Security in 2003.⁹³⁵

2. Current State of Investigative Mission

USSS’s investigative mission includes crimes that involve counterfeit currency, financial institution fraud, computer and telecommunications fraud, false identification documents, access device fraud, advance fee fraud, electronic funds transfers, and money laundering.⁹³⁶ USSS also plays an important role in facilitating relationships between other law enforcement entities and academia. USSS maintains the Electronic Crimes Task Forces, which focus on identifying and locating international cyber criminals connected to cyber intrusions, bank fraud, data breaches, and other computer-related crimes.⁹³⁷ Additionally, USSS runs the National Computer Forensic Institute, which provides law enforcement officers, prosecutors, and judges with cyber training and information to combat cybercrime.⁹³⁸

A majority of USSS’s workforce investigates financial crimes.⁹³⁹ As of September 2014, fifty-two percent of USSS’s total workforce were Series 1811 “special agents,” who are involved in criminal investigations.⁹⁴⁰ This is a higher percentage than the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s thirty-nine percent of Series 1811 employees.⁹⁴¹ Most special agents are in USSS’s 2,659-person Office of Investigations.⁹⁴² On average, these special agents spend only about a third of their time on protection-related activities.⁹⁴³ This number increased to more than forty-four percent during the 2012 election cycle.⁹⁴⁴ These protection activities could include a temporary assignment to a detail, protective intelligence investigations, or developing complex protective operational plans.⁹⁴⁵

The Committee found the amount of time special agents are spending on protection is too low, and the amount of special agents involved in criminal investigations is too high. USSS's model should be shifted to address this. This could be accomplished by reducing the investigative responsibilities of USSS.

3. Benefits of Investigative Mission to Protective Mission

USSS maintains the investigative mission provides important benefits to the protective mission. According to USSS, some skills developed in investigations are also used in an agent's protective duty, such as:

- Expertise in handwriting and forgery techniques skills is useful in investigating handwritten letters and suspicious package threats;
- Expertise in investigating electronic and financial crimes skills is useful in investigating threats made on the Internet;
- Tactical operation (i.e. surveillance, arrests, and search warrants) and law enforcement writing (i.e. affidavits, after action reports, and operations plans) skills are useful for both investigations and protection; and
- The partnerships that are created between field offices and local law enforcement are useful for protection events.⁹⁴⁶

The Committee found these skills could be honed elsewhere, or in training, or in a USSS with a much more limited investigative mission. These skill sets are more useful in some protective situations than others; for example, they are more useful in the more technical protective intelligence duties (which account for only about five percent of an agent's time) than in actual physical protection. USSS could focus investigative training on better complementing protective duties if it were not focused on the specific complexities of financial and cybercrime.

USSS has argued that investigative rotations provide a respite from the hyper-vigilance needed on a protective detail, which often consists of unpredictable and long hours.⁹⁴⁷ Limiting the agency's investigative duties could also be done in such a way where relief from hyper-vigilance could be preserved. For example, training could fill the vacuum left by removing some investigative duties. It is important to note that employees would not be forced to work as many consecutive shifts if the staffing problems were solved by reducing the strain from manning investigative functions. The problem of tedium and the need for respite from hyper vigilance is not unique to USSS and exists in many law enforcement and military jobs. More prescriptive solutions as to how to manage a special agent's time may be best answered through an outside scientific study. Additionally, USSS should focus on relief from hyper vigilance in regards to the Uniformed Division, whose duties are far more tedious and repetitive.

USSS asserts the investigative mission benefits the protective mission by providing special agents who are able to be pulled from the field's 141 domestic offices to assist with protection duties when needed.⁹⁴⁸ This "surge capacity" is tapped during large events such as a Presidential election. Protection needs are not always consistent and it is important to have the ability to pull more manpower as required. In the case of National Security Special Events, USSS pulls manpower from other federal agencies, which end up far exceeding the USSS employees working the event.⁹⁴⁹ This strategy indicates that USSS does not require their staffing numbers to equal the total staffing need for certain events, thus their current model cannot provide full "surge capacity" without help from other agencies. Even with a smaller investigative mission and a smaller field office presence, USSS could continue to tap other federal resources when a large scale protection event requires the agency to do so.

4. Position of Protective Mission Panel

While noting ways in which skills acquired from performing the investigative mission benefit agents in performing the protective mission, the Protective Mission Panel also considered the possible benefit of shedding non-essential missions and reiterated that the core mission is the protection of the President.⁹⁵⁰ The panel wrote:

For years, the Service has taken on additional missions—in both its protective and investigative roles—but has not matched its request for additional resources to those expanded missions. The Service has to increase the number of agents and, to an even greater extent, increase the size of the Uniformed Division to ensure protection of the White House. We think that a new director should give serious consideration to whether there are collateral or non-essential missions that can be shed, though we believe the Service's investigative mission provides benefits to its protective mission.⁹⁵¹

The Panel concluded: "[T]he Secret Service cannot lose focus on its core and essential mission: the protection of the current, past, and future Presidents of the United States."⁹⁵²

During the February 12, 2015 Committee hearing, members of the Panel expanded on some of those points.⁹⁵³ Former Deputy Attorney General Mark Filip explained that not all investigative activities benefit the protection mission by the same amount:

[T]here is certainly some benefits [sic] to be gained from the investigative mission to some extent. Now, there is a continuum in those investigative activities. To the extent, for example, that cyber investigations involve the safety of the First Family, of the President, that is probably going to be part of the core mission of the Secret Service. To the extent that cyber involves looking at whether a movie studio has been hacked, or a health insurance company, or a multinational leak, you know, retail-type entity, that might be further afield, and other parts of the Federal Government that are involved in cyber activities might be better positioned to handle the lead on that, again, all through the core prism of what the main mission of the Secret Service is.

So, you know, we had a couple months to look at this. We don't purport to have the final answers. But we think the guideposts on this will be what is the core mission of the Secret Service, and does this particular activity, whatever it is, further that mission or distract from it?⁹⁵⁴

He also testified:

We think that the investigative mission in some form is consistent with the protective mission. Some of those skills, some of those technologies dovetail in very nicely. That said, protecting the financial system of the United States is a massive endeavor if there aren't bounds and limits put on it. And it is likely the case—and we think this is important because it also flows through the budgeting and personnel issues—that there has to be a very hard, good-faith look at whether or not investigative functions enhance the ability to protect or distract. And so the issue you have identified is very real. We share that concern. That is one of the most important things we think a new Director and a leadership team is going to have to look at.⁹⁵⁵

Former Associate Attorney General Tom Perrelli stated:

And let me add on the question, one of the reasons why you find that the investigative mission supports the protective mission is because of the need for surge capacity or additional capacity when the President or other protectees travel, particularly foreign travel, as well as certainly during political campaigns, the arrival of the Pope in the United States, and those kinds of things where you need to be able to draw on a significant force. You also need a period of time, those 4 or 5 years in the field, to train and then ultimately come to Washington to be part of the protective detail. If you didn't have the investigative mission, you would have a very different looking organization, really focused solely on protection. And that, I think, is, would be a very substantial change with a variety of pros and cons. Ultimately, as a panel, we decided that we think, as Mr. Filip said, that the investigative mission does support that protective mission. But that because we believe that the protective mission is paramount, a new Director has to make some serious choices.⁹⁵⁶

⁹⁵⁵ Id. at 26.

The Committee agrees with the Panel's concerns. Documents and testimony obtained by the Committee show the Director and the Administration should strongly consider adjusting the agency's mission.

5. DHS OIG Report on DHS Cyber Coordination

On September 4, 2015, DHS OIG released an audit of DHS component's coordination in performing their cyber missions. The audit "sought to determine whether [DHS components'] cyber roles and responsibilities have been well delineated and a process is in place for department-wide information sharing and coordinated responses to cyber incidents and criminal investigations."⁹⁵⁷ The audit recommended "DHS develop both a department-wide cyber strategy and training program" and "DHS components must also address the information security deficiencies we identified."⁹⁵⁸

DHS OIG analyzed components with cyber responsibilities within DHS, including Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), the National Protection and Programs Directorate (NPPD), and USSS. In addition to recommending an integrated cyber training program and increased awareness of other component's responsibilities, DHS OIG had some adverse findings about USSS. DHS located vulnerabilities on external and internal websites used by ICE and USSS agents to report investigation statistics, case tracking, and information sharing.⁹⁵⁹ USSS recently updated their external website on September 10, 2015.⁹⁶⁰ DHS OIG also found USSS was not compliant with certain baseline DHS information security program requirements and Federal Information Security Act requirements and that USSS has "not provided annual specialized training to individuals with significant cyber responsibilities, a DHS requirement."⁹⁶¹

Many of the findings of this audit concern the "blocking and tackling" of internal cybersecurity. More troublesome than the consequences of USSS's failure to meet this requirement is that USSS is struggling to meet compliance issues related to its role within a larger, bureaucratic DHS. Such a relationship could prove to be a distraction and require a diversion of resources away from its core mission.

DHS OIG also found USSS personnel expressed that there are very few formal training opportunities for non-technical operators and special agents, and that USSS instead placed more emphasis on training forensics personnel.⁹⁶² This suggests that USSS is to an extent consolidating cyber responsibilities with forensic personnel, and not developing special agents who would share a dual function of cyber and protective expertise. If that is the case, it demonstrates that USSS's cyber mission is not as inseparable from its protective mission as advertised.

The findings of this audit are problematic for an agency playing an increasingly important role in the federal government's cybersecurity initiatives.

6. USSS Master Central Index

As part of a 2015 DHS OIG investigation into the improper access and distribution of Privacy Act protected information, the Committee became aware of a problematic system for storing sensitive information, the Master Central Index ("MCI"). According to DHS OIG:

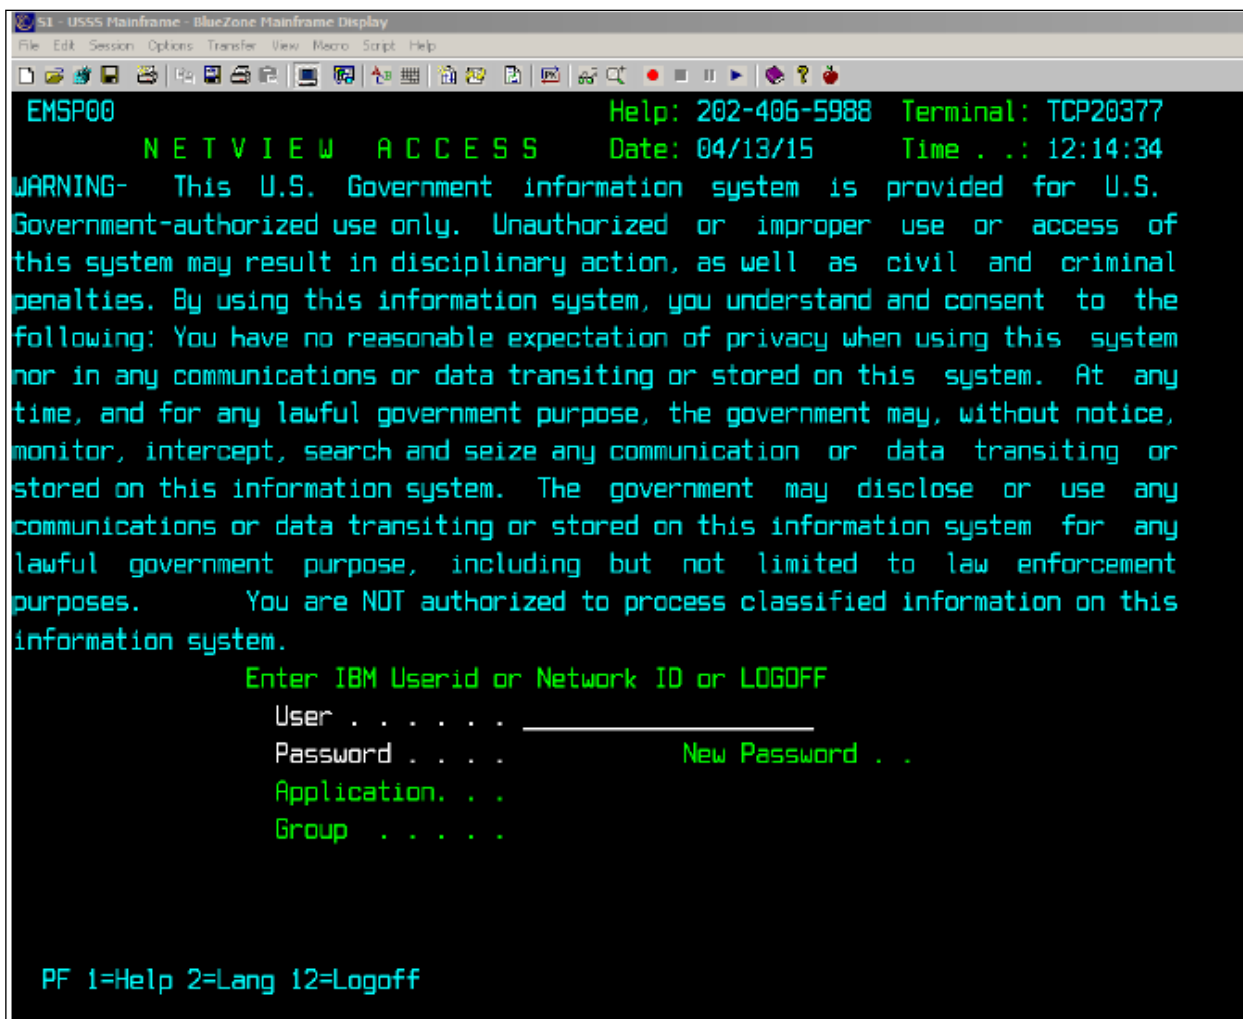

MCI is a 1980's vintage, electronic database and system of records used by the Secret Service to house agency-unique information, including information on individuals who are the subject of criminal, non-criminal, and protective intelligence investigations, Secret Service personnel and applicant data, and other records such as firearms and physical fitness qualifications.⁹⁶³

This antiquated legacy system did not seem compatible with the role USSS is trying to establish for itself as a leader in the cyber community.

The image above was the warning screen that reminded a USSS employee to only use or access information that is authorized.⁹⁶⁴ Once past this warning screen, an employee could access troves of sensitive data, including personal identification information such as dates of birth, Social Security numbers, contact information, and other information.⁹⁶⁵ Further, the system was not naturally auditable. DHS OIG had to request USSS write its own customized scripts to perform searches to determine who accessed records within the MCI.⁹⁶⁶ Without this script, MCI had no usable audit trails.⁹⁶⁷

At a November 17, 2015 hearing, Director Clancy announced that the MCI system had been “officially retired” and that “with respect to applicant records, the number of employees with access to the new system has been reduced by more than 95 percent.”⁹⁶⁸ DHS OIG’s Office of Technology Audits is currently conducting an audit of the new system and plans to issue final report in February 2016.⁹⁶⁹

The potential for internal improper access to such a wide-range of sensitive information is extremely problematic. A self-enforced warning screen was the only thing which stood between a USSS employee and a bevy of personal information. One egregious example of the potential danger of unauthorized access to government systems occurred in 2013 when a special agent was able to confirm the home address of a woman he had previously approached and unsuccessfully asked out on a date.⁹⁷⁰ The agent then traveled from the New York field office to California to visit her.⁹⁷¹ The special agent appeared at her home and asked her out again and was again denied.⁹⁷² The woman then took a photograph of his license plate and contacted the police.⁹⁷³

7. USSS Not Clear About Priority

USSS has failed to make clear that protection is its ultimate priority. In USSS’s 2012 Annual Report, Financial Investigations was listed as “Goal 1” in their Strategic Objectives.⁹⁷⁴ Protection was “Goal 2.”⁹⁷⁵ The report also listed the investigative mission ahead of the protection mission in both the “Mission” and “Vision” sections.⁹⁷⁶

Similarly, USSS has defined its mission differently at times. For example, in a May 2010 internal analysis, USSS defined its mission as:

The mission of the United States Secret Service is to safeguard the nation’s financial infrastructure and payment systems to preserve the integrity of the economy, and to protect national leaders, visiting heads of state and government, designated sites and National Special Security Events (NSSEs).⁹⁷⁷

The same document also lists “mission complexity” (e.g., dual mission, changes in threat complexity for investigations and protection, increased protective and investigative requirements, unknown future protective and investigative requirements changes) as a challenge and constraint which is impacting Protective Operations. Similar documents define the mission in that order. As of now, USSS describes itself as a global crime fighter:

The U.S. Secret Service has grown from a small bureau staffed by a few operatives in 1865, to a law enforcement organization of nearly 7,000 employees worldwide. Today, the U.S. Secret Service fights crime on a global scale through its field offices located in the United States, Canada, Mexico, South America, Europe, Africa and Asia. The agency works closely with local, state and federal law enforcement agencies. These entities are valued partners of the Secret Service, and they are integral to the agency's investigative and protective mission.⁹⁷⁸

This demonstrates that USSS sees itself as a global law enforcement agency first, and a protection agency second.

The Committee found that USSS's prioritization of its investigative mission is a result of the increase in complexity and volume of cybercrime. According to internal meeting notes obtained by the Committee, USSS may be seeking to create its own cyber division.⁹⁷⁹ At that meeting, a senior supervisory agent allegedly acknowledged that his "priority is cyber, cyber, cyber" and "that's the way of the future."⁹⁸⁰

8. Implementation of Panel Recommendation Regarding Non-Essential Mission

On October 8, 2015, Committee staff met with Tom Dougherty, Chief Strategy Officer of the Office of Strategic Planning.⁹⁸¹ Dougherty is in charge of tracking the implementation of the Protective Mission Panel's recommendations.⁹⁸² Despite repeatedly assuring Committee staff that there were "no sacred cows" in the process of implementing the Panel's recommendations, Dougherty said that USSS has not looked at missions to potentially shed.⁹⁸³ Dougherty instead referred to the emphasis of the professionalization of APT staff.⁹⁸⁴

A reshuffling of the duties already within USSS does not satisfy the Panel's recommendation that the "new director should give serious consideration to whether there are collateral or non-essential missions that can be shed."⁹⁸⁵ USSS has chosen to willfully ignore the Panel's recommendation on this issue.

9. Cyber and Financial Crimes Missions across Government

There are many other entities in the federal government that have significant cyber responsibilities. The FBI has the widest criminal investigative authority; other components within the Department of Homeland Security share some responsibilities with USSS; the Department of Treasury has certain terrorism-related financial foci; the Postal Service has mail fraud authorities; the Central Intelligence Agency has cyber-intelligence authorities; the Department of Defense has military cyber authorities; and the Drug Enforcement Agency has drug-related financial crimes authorities. Simply put, there are many other agencies which have similar or overlapping responsibilities with USSS.⁹⁸⁶ Transferring USSS's cyber investigative responsibilities would reduce inefficient redundancies and consolidate physical resources and expertise. Due to the FBI's size and national presence, it is a logical entity to assume portions of USSS's cyber mission. However a transfer of authorities occurs, it would be necessary for the proper personnel and resources to follow.

At an October 22, 2015 House Judiciary hearing, Representative Chaffetz questioned FBI Director James Comey about the FBI's cyber mission and its relationship with other government agencies:

CHAFFETZ: What—what is it that you can't do? That is, is there another department or agency that's doing something that the FBI couldn't do?

COMEY: In a cyber realm? That's a good question.

CHAFFETZ: Well, thank you.

COMEY: Yes, I don't—I don't—I can't think of it sitting here. Our responsibility is obviously confined to the United States. And so we work with our partners, NSA, in particular, in trying to fight the cyber threat that's coming from overseas. The bureau doesn't have the ability to reach out in that way. And so that's...

(CROSSTALK)

CHAFFETZ: Let me—let me ask you in the context of the United States Secret Service. I was surprised to learn that two-thirds of an agent—the agents that they have, two-thirds of their time is spent on investigations and cyber. And it—it begs the question to me, why do we have such a small group of people doing that which the FBI has a much bigger resource infrastructure and expertise in doing? And as we look at potentially restructuring the—the Secret Service and getting more focused on—on the protective mission, why not combine the two? Or what is it that they do that you don't want to do, or that they do that you can't do? I'm trying to get my arms around.

COMEY: Yes, it was a good—such a good question, I misunderstood it. I'm sorry. The—the secret—one of the things I've been trying to do is drive us closer together with the Secret Service because they have expertise, especially in the financial- related intrusions and credit card scams. They've spent years developing that expertise. And so I don't want to duplicate it. So we're trying to drive ourselves together. I'd like us to combine our taskforce. It doesn't make any sense for them to have electronic crimes taskforce, and [for] me to have a cyber taskforce; there ought to be one. They do great work. I want to make sure we don't duplicate. And I want to do joint training with them. They're doing some great training. So are we. That's one of the things we can't do. We can't do enough for state and local law enforcement to help them deal with digital crime.

CHAFFETZ: So in terms of the personnel that you have associated with that, how would that work? Are there other agencies that would also—I mean, mean Secret Service is but one. Are there other agencies that that should be also included in that because we got a homeland security organization that thinks they should be in charge of all the cyber?

COMEY: Yes, I think with respect to the criminal work that we do, there are people at HSI within the Department of Homeland Security who are doing cyber-related crime work. And then there's a lot of state local law enforcement doing it. And they are part of our taskforces.

CHAFFETZ: This—can you give me any more, shedding more light on the FBI's next-generation cyber initiative? Explain that to me a little bit more.

COMEY: Yes, without eating up all your time, it's—it's our strategy, my strategy for where we're going to take the FBI in the next three to five years. And so it involves deploying our people in a different way, getting better training, better equipment, focusing ourselves on the threats that I think the FBI, given its footprint, is best able to address. So it's our sort of whole of FBI approach to cyber over the next three to five years.

CHAFFETZ: And so when you have an FBI—you have FBI personnel that will focus potentially their entire career just on cyber, correct?

COMEY: Right.

COMEY: Correct.⁹⁸⁷

Director Comey's testimony highlights some of the institutional advantages and success USSS currently has combating cybercrime and some of the issues related to USSS's role in the government's coordination of its cyber efforts. First, efforts are being duplicated, as exemplified by both FBI and USSS having electronic crimes taskforces. As Director Comey stated, one entity should control electronic crimes taskforces. Second, in order for agencies to coordinate efficiently in real-time, they must train together. When FBI and USSS coordinate training together there is bureaucratic complexity that would not exist if FBI assumed the additional responsibilities of USSS. Third, there are personnel at FBI who focus only on cybercrime whereas at USSS agents have both protective and investigative duties. This results in asymmetry between the experience being developed at the two agencies. Cybercrime investigations may be enhanced when there are employees that focus on it alone.

According to FBI's website, FBI "lead[s] the national effort to investigate high-tech crimes, including cyber-based terrorism, espionage, computer intrusions, and major cyber fraud."⁹⁸⁸ As it currently stands, it can be unclear who is in charge. Below is a chart from the Department of Justice's website on the proper reporting of certain types of crimes.⁹⁸⁹

This chart presents a variety of options on where to report a potential cybercrime. Making matters worse, the Secret Service links contained on this chart direct to a defunct website.⁹⁹⁰

In addition, government agencies themselves are uncertain as to who has the lead on a particular issue. For example, the FBI and USSS are jointly investigating the hacking of a private email account used by CIA Director John Brennan and his family.⁹⁹¹ When an investigation requires two investigating bodies, there are potential concerns around who is actually in charge when the chief intelligence officer in the country's email is hacked.

As cybercrime becomes more prevalent and complex, the federal government needs to be organized as efficiently as possible. Given that a significant portion of USSS's mission is investigating cybercrime and the agency is suffering from severe staffing shortages, there is a perfect opportunity to more efficiently consolidate cyber responsibilities while simultaneously alleviating a major strain on resources within USSS.

VIII. Conclusion

USSS is an agency in crisis. The Committee's bipartisan investigation found the agency's recent public failures are not a series of isolated events, but the product of an insular culture that has historically been resistant to change. It is likely USSS's challenges will become more difficult in the immediate future due to the problems it faces in the areas of hiring and staffing.

The attrition rate reflects a fundamental fact about the problems that plague the agency: USSS cannot repair itself without first restoring the trust of its employees and increasing personnel dramatically to meet mission and training requirements. Whether from missteps at the executive level or at the field office supervisor level, it is clear many of the rank-and-file have lost confidence in USSS's current leadership. USSS can restore pride in the agency by excelling at its primary mission: ensuring the safety of the president and other protectees.

Senior agency leadership has publicly lamented the fact that rank-and-file employees are more comfortable speaking with people outside the agency than they are with their supervisors. Until the Secret Service's culture changes so employees who identify ways to reform the agency can make suggestions and air grievances without fear of reprisal, it will be difficult for leadership to fully realize the extent of the reforms necessary. In that sense, this report should be useful for agency leadership. The Committee relied on numerous agency whistleblowers to develop the findings and recommendations contained herein. Enacting these recommendations, and those of the Protective Mission Panel, is an important step toward restoring employee confidence.

The Committee believed—and still does—that new senior leadership from outside the agency would be best positioned to enact the reforms that the agency desperately needs. Meanwhile, Director Clancy has an opportunity to move the agency forward. USSS leadership needs to honestly acknowledge the problems plaguing the agency and then confront them head-on. The Committee has heard repeatedly from USSS employees that they crave leaders who will speak with candor about these issues, because only then can the agency truly set about moving in the right direction. We remain hopeful that USSS can overcome its resistance to change and capitalize on this opportunity for progress.

MEMORANDUM

To: [REDACTED]

From: [REDACTED]

Subject: The Secret Service Salaries and Expenses Appropriation for FY1999-FY2015

This memorandum is in response to your request for information tracking the evolution of the Salaries and Expenses appropriation for the United States Secret Service (USSS) from FY1999-FY2015. You also requested that CRS include top-line numbers for USSS for the time period as well.

CRS based its analyses on budget justification documents and appropriations committee reports. Due to inconsistencies in the data presented in some of these documents, CRS was unable to analyze a complete data set for the time period you desired. However, the information provided through those budget justifications allowed CRS to develop a general history and perform a limited analysis. CRS has received additional data from the USSS on staffing levels, and has updated the content of this memorandum as first transmitted on October 19, 2015 to include this additional information.

Information in this memorandum is drawn from publicly available sources and is of general interest to Congress. While your identity and specific request will remain confidential, all or part of this information may be provided by CRS in memoranda or reports for general distribution to Congress. None of the information included or used to compile this memorandum is classified or law-enforcement sensitive.

Top-Line Funding History of the USSS, FY1999-FY2015

Table 1 presents an overview of DHS’s annual appropriations request versus the enacted amounts. The information is drawn from appropriations committee reports. Requested and enacted appropriations appear in the second and third columns, respectively. The fourth column is the difference between the two. The requested amounts reflect the annual appropriations request, without factoring in budget amendments or supplemental appropriations requests. The enacted amounts do not reflect the impact of rescissions or transfers.

History of the Salaries and Expenses Appropriation, FY1999-FY2015

Over the time period under discussion, with the exception of FY2007, when separate appropriations were provided for “Protection, Administration, and Training,” and “Investigations and Field Operations,” the “Salaries and Expenses” appropriation (hereafter S&E) has carried the bulk of funding for USSS. However, the S&E appropriation has not had an entirely consistent makeup during this time.

In FY1999, USSS was a part of the Treasury Department, and funded under the Treasury, Postal and Government Operations Act.¹ There were three budget activities that made up the USSS S&E appropriation. The first was “Investigations, Protection, and Uniformed Activities.” The other two activities were “Other Security Activities,” and “Candidate Protection Activities.” These were provided under a single appropriation, with limited direction from Congress regarding specific activities. The cost to the general fund of the Treasury of these activities was partially offset by resources from the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund and reimbursements from the Treasury's forfeiture fund.

In FY2001, USSS reduced its use of offsets from the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund and the Treasury's forfeiture fund to pay for its activities. In FY1999 and FY2000, these funds had offset over $102 million in costs that included protection of presidential candidates, countering chemical and biological threats to protectees, support for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, and replacement of vehicles. These costs would be absorbed within the S&E appropriation, which rose a net $16 million from FY2000 levels, although appropriations were no longer needed for the costs of protecting presidential candidates.

From FY1999-FY2001, USSS also received over $120 million in transfers, supplemental appropriations, and emergency appropriations. After 9/11, USSS S&E received almost $105 million in supplemental appropriations for FY2002,² and another $30 million for FY2003.³

In the middle of FY2003, USSS was transferred to the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), and began to be funded under the new Homeland Security Appropriations Act in FY2004. This was the first year that detail tables in the conference report provided final funding direction to the USSS at the program, project, and activity level. S&E was split between "Protective, Investigative, & Uniformed Activities" and "Presidential Candidate Protective Activities."

Over the next several fiscal years, the internal structure of the S&E account shifted several times in appropriations committee reports with activities grouped as Protection, Field Operations, Administration, and Training for FY2005 and FY2006. In FY2007, the S&E appropriation was split in two, becoming "Protection, Administration, and Training" and "Investigations and Field Operations." The S&E appropriation returned in FY2008, split between "Protection," "Administration," and "Training." "Investigations and Field Operations" was still separate, until it rejoined the reconstituted S&E appropriation as "Investigations" in FY2009.

Over this time period specific funding levels were provided for a range of USSS activities: The detail table accompanying the FY2005 appropriations act sets funding levels for ten separate activities in the S&E account, compared to five activities and subactivities in 2004. These are outlined in Table 2.

The FY2005 model, with the cyclical addition of "Presidential Candidate Nominee Protection" under "Protection," was generally the approach to organizing the S&E appropriation until FY2012. As noted above, a departure from that structure occurred in FY2007 and FY2008 with reorganizations of the S&E appropriation into different pieces, but the individual activities continued to be listed in the committee reports.⁴

⁴ One shift that occurred in name only was when "Field Operations" was renamed "Investigations" in FY2009.

In FY2012, “Information Integration and Technology Transformation” first appeared as a new activity in the appropriations committees’ detail table. Then in FY2013, “White House Mail Screening” moved into “Protection of Persons and Facilities,” and “Electronic Crimes Special Agent Program and Electronic Crimes Task Forces” was subsumed in “Domestic Field Operations.” The structure of this appropriation may change again in the FY2017 appropriations cycle with the adoption of a standardized appropriation structure across DHS.

S&E Appropriation Levels and Actual Spending

Table 3 provides information on the history of appropriations requested, enacted, and put into use for the USSS S&E appropriation. The first three years of the data are somewhat affected by the use of the Treasury forfeiture fund and the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund to support operations that would later be incorporated into the USSS S&E appropriation without offset.

FY2016 USSS Appropriations Status

The S&E appropriation is currently covered by a continuing resolution (P.L. 114-53), which runs through December 11, 2015, and provides funding at a rate for operations equal to what was provided in FY2015, minus 0.2108%. According to USSS, interim continuing resolutions hamper their ability to hire and train personnel, due to restrictions placed on their ability to use the resources provided.⁵

Table 4 presents a comparison of the FY2015 USSS appropriation in detail, the FY2016 appropriations request, and the recommendations of the House and Senate appropriations committees in their reported FY2016 appropriations bills for DHS.

Personnel Breakdown by Category

From FY2006-FY2015, the USSS did not provide in its budget justifications a personnel breakdown between special agents, its Uniformed Division, and support staff. This was not always the case in years prior to FY2006, and the USSS may be returning to its former policy. From FY2001 through FY2005, the Secret Service provided data on “Full-Time Equivalent” (FTE) work-years funded in its S&E appropriation. In the justification documents for FY2016, USSS included an accounting of the FY2014 actual FTE work-years achieved.

Table 5 includes the information provided in USSS budget justifications regarding the number of permanent FTE the department had each fiscal year, divided across the three categories of personnel noted above.

After the initial transmission of this memorandum, the USSS provided additional data on “positions achieved” by the USSS from FY2006-FY2015. Table 6 provides this information, as does Figure 1 in a visual format. The data is not directly comparable to Table 5, as FTE is a measure of hours worked, “positions achieved” is a measurement of people employed at a given point in time.

USSS Personnel Costs

Through the supporting information provided in USSS budget justifications, CRS was able to develop an accounting of personnel costs for USSS permanent positions paid through the S&E account, starting in FY2004.⁶ Data was also available on the number of permanent positions distributed across the GS pay scale in USSS over that time period, and the average salaries from FY2008 going forward.

Costs by Object Class

Table 7 presents data based on USSS reporting of its use of S&E appropriations by the Office of Management and Budget's system of object classes, which presents obligations by the items or services purchased by the federal government. Object Class 10 is the overarching class devoted to "Personnel Compensation and Benefits," which commonly includes the costs noted below.

Distribution of USSS Civil Service Employees Across the GS Scale

Notes: Data is what was presented in USSS budget justification documents as actual performance, with the exceptions noted below.

- a. Represents data developed using USSS-recommended methodology of combining data from S&E component appropriations presented as “Actual” in the FY2009 USSS S&E justification.
- b. Represents data from the FY2015 request as presented in the FY2016 USSS S&E justification rather than “Actual.”

The most common General Schedule (GS) grades by position in the USSS are GS-12 through GS-14. Since FY2004, the most significant growth has been in the number of GS-13 positions. There were almost 1,200 more GS-13s in FY2015 than in FY2004, and 88 more GS-14s. The number of GS-9s—once one of the more common grades in the USSS—has dropped sharply since 2011. The number of GS-7s and below have all declined since the USSS was transferred to DHS.

The average GS position in the USSS was projected to be 12.45 in FY2015, up from 11.33 in FY2004. The size of the executive cadre at the USSS rose from 39 in FY2006 to 50 in FY2009 – and was estimated to be 52 in FY2015.

Other graded positions, which generally reflects positions in the USSS Uniform Division, rose from 1,368 to 1,743 in 2007, for four years, peaking at 1,767 in 2010, then dropped to 1,350. The FY2016 budget request anticipates 1,457 such positions, a sharp increase from FY2014 levels.⁷

Salary Average by Full-Time Equivalent

Data on average salary for ES and GS positions, as well as data on average grade first appeared in the FY2006 budget justifications, reaching back to report actual performance from FY2004. With the changes to the structure of the S&E appropriation for FY2007 and FY2008, information on averages could not be separately developed by CRS. Data on FY2014 performance was not provided in the FY2016 request.

From: [REDACTED]

Subject: U.S. Secret Service Testimony, 1865 - 2015

This memorandum responds to your request for a list and link to every instance that the U.S. Secret Service (USSS) testified before a congressional committee. Specifically, you requested a list of “for all hearings in which USSS appeared as a witness.” To complete this list, CRS searched 150 years of hearing from 1865 to the present using <http://congressional.proquest.com>. While every effort was made to ensure this list is comprehensive, omissions are possible.

If you have additional questions, please feel free to contact either author [REDACTED] above. The information and analysis contained in this memorandum is of interest to other clients and may appear in future CRS products. However, your confidentiality as a requester will be preserved.

Source: Compiled from data available in the ProQuest Congressional database.

Notes: Each entry contains the first, of potentially multiple, hearing dates. The final column of the table provides a link to the ProQuest Congressional database, which offers additional information on the committee conducting the hearing and in most cases a full text transcript of the proceedings. Several table entries contain what superficially may appear to be redundant information—with similar hearing titles occurring on the same day. These instances generally reflect either appropriations hearings where both the House and Senate held a hearing on the same day, or where ProQuest Congressional offers multiple transcripts for one hearing in multiple locations. In either case, unique links are provided for each entry and contain distinctive information.

This 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey Report provides summary results for subagencies within your department or agency. The results include response percentages for each survey item. The definitions for the Positive, Neutral, and Negative response percentages vary in the following ways across the three primary response scales used in the survey:

Positive: Strongly Agree and Agree / Very Satisfied and Satisfied / Very Good and Good Neutral: Neither Agree nor Disagree / Neither Satisfied nor Dissatisfied / Fair

Negative: Disagree and Strongly Disagree / Dissatisfied and Very Dissatisfied / Poor and Very Poor

Positive, Neutral, and Negative percentages are based on the total number of responses (N) that are in these three categories. The number of Do Not Know (DNK) or No Basis to Judge (NBJ) responses, where applicable, is listed separately.

The last column indicates whether or not there was a significant increase, decrease, or no change in positive percentages from the previous year. Arrows slanting up indicate a statistically significant increase, and arrows slanting down indicate a statistically significant decrease. Horizontal arrows indicate the change was not statistically significant. For example, in the row with the 2015 results, if the arrow was slanting up ↗, there was a significant increase in positive percentages from 2014 to 2015.

Note: The report tables that follow do not include results for any year listed in the Response Summary table (above) that had fewer than 10 completed surveys. If there were fewer than 30 respondents for a given year, the column showing the 'Difference from previous year' will show '--' to signify that no test was performed due to small sample size. Items 72 to 78 are on a different response scale and are not included in the significance testing. 2010 response percentages are shown to provide context for the significance test from 2011.

To: All Supervisors and All Manual Holders of the Human Resources and Training Manual

Filing Instructions:

- Remove and destroy the PER-05 Table of Contents and replace with the attached Table of Contents.
- File the attached section PER-05(13) immediately behind PER-05(12).
- File this Policy Memorandum in front of section PER-05(13).
- This directive is in effect until superseded.

Impact Statement: This directive issues the United States Secret Service's Table of Penalties.

The United States Secret Service's (Secret Service) Table of Penalties is intended to serve as a guide in determining appropriate corrective, disciplinary, or adverse actions for common offenses and supersedes all previous policies and practices regarding disciplinary offenses and penalties.

The Offense Codes outlined in the Table of Penalties do not cover every possible offense but rather provide a general description of certain types of misconduct, whether committed on or off-duty, for which employees may be disciplined. The absence of a specific Offense Code covering an act does not mean that such an act is condoned, permissible, or would not result in disciplinary or adverse action. Offenses not described in the Offense Codes may be separately identified and result in appropriate disciplinary or adverse action, provided there is a nexus between the misconduct and the efficiency of the service. Employees are encouraged and expected to report through their chain of command, or the Inspection Division Hotline, or the DHS Office of the Inspector General, information that indicates another employee may have engaged in misconduct described in the Table of Penalties. Supervisors are required to report through their chain of command an employee's misconduct involving violations set forth in the Table of Penalties. Failure of a supervisor to report information required by this policy may result in disciplinary action.

Mandatory Review: The Responsible Office will review all policy contained in this section in its entirety by or before November 2016.

UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE TABLE OF PENALTIES

Introduction

The United States Secret Service's (Secret Service) Table of Penalties is intended to serve as a guide in determining appropriate corrective, disciplinary or adverse actions for common offenses and supersedes all previous policies and practices regarding disciplinary offenses and penalties.

The Offense Codes outlined in the Table of Penalties do not cover every possible offense but rather provide a general description of certain types of misconduct, whether committed on or off-duty, for which employees may be disciplined. The absence of a specific Offense Code covering an act does not mean that such an act is condoned, permissible, or would not result in disciplinary or adverse action. Offenses not described in the Offense Codes may be separately identified and result in appropriate disciplinary or adverse action, provided there is a nexus between the misconduct and the efficiency of the service. Employees are encouraged and expected to report through their chain of command, or the Inspection Division Hotline, or the DHS Office of the Inspector General hotline, information that indicates another employee may have engaged in misconduct described in the Table of Penalties. Supervisors are required to report through their chain of command an employee's misconduct involving violations set forth in the Table of Penalties. Failure of a supervisor to report information required by this policy may result in disciplinary action. See Offense Code 5.6.

Purpose and Progressive Nature of Discipline

The Secret Service is a world renowned pre-eminent law enforcement agency and is distinguished by its responsibilities to protect the president, vice-president, and other national leaders, visiting world leaders, and designated National Special Security Events. As such, the Secret Service employs advanced recruitment strategies designed to attract and retain employees who possess the highest levels of aptitude and integrity. All Secret Service employees are held to a high standard of conduct and are expected to be worthy of trust and confidence. The Secret Service's disciplinary and adverse action processes serve to ensure adherence to the highest standards of conduct. Disciplinary measures are imposed to promote behaviors and principles that champion the pursuit of organizational achievement and excellence. The discipline model of the Secret Service is designed to incentivize self-discipline at all levels. Discipline at the Secret Service is progressive in nature, meaning that subsequent acts of misconduct are treated with increasing severity, especially but not exclusively, when the acts of misconduct are similar in nature. Certain offenses are so egregious that a single act is sufficient to warrant an employee's removal.

Penalty Ranges and Factors Considered in Determining the Penalty

The Secret Service's Penalty Guidelines are expressed in terms of a Standard Penalty, a Mitigated Range, and an Aggravated Range. Selection of an appropriate penalty involves a responsible balancing of the relevant factors in each case. The aggravating and mitigating factors listed in the Penalty Guidelines are a general description of certain factors that will result in higher or lower penalties depending on the specific case's circumstances. The factors listed in the Penalty Guidelines are illustrative and not exhaustive.

In addition, the Douglas Factors set forth below will be considered in every case prior to determining the penalty. Not all of these factors are applicable to every case, and the deciding official will balance the relevant ones.

The Douglas Factors are:

- 1) The nature and seriousness of the offense, and its relation to the employee's duties, position, and responsibilities, including whether the offense was intentional or technical or inadvertent, or was committed maliciously or for gain, or was frequently repeated;
- 2) The employee's job level and type of employment, including supervisory or fiduciary role, contacts with the public, and prominence of the position;
- 3) The employee's past disciplinary record;
- 4) The employee's past work record, including length of service, performance on the job, ability to get along with fellow workers, and dependability;
- 5) The effect of the offense upon the employee's ability to perform at a satisfactory level and its effect upon supervisors' confidence in the employee's ability to perform assigned duties;
- 6) Consistency of the penalty with those imposed upon other employees for the same or similar offenses;
- 7) Consistency of the penalty any applicable agency table of penalties;
- 8) The notoriety of the offense or its impact upon the reputation of the agency;
- 9) The clarity with which the employee was on notice of any rules that were violated in committing the offense, or had been warned about the conduct in question;
- 10) The potential for the employee's rehabilitation;
- 11) Mitigating circumstances surrounding the offense such as unusual job tensions, personality problems, mental impairment, harassment, or bad faith, malice or provocation on the part of others involved in the matter; and
- 12) The adequacy and effectiveness of alternative sanctions to deter such conduct in the future by the employee or others.

The penalty for misconduct will be mitigated or aggravated only after full and fair consideration of all available information. The Table of Penalties is a guide to help ensure consistent application of similar penalties for similar offenses but the selection of a penalty should always be appropriate to the facts of the case.

Statutory, regulatory, or policy citations listed in the Offense Codes or Penalty Guidelines are provided strictly for the convenience of the user. A specific reference to a statute, regulation, or policy in the Offense Codes or Penalty Guidelines does not mean that the citation is the only one applicable or that a citation is required to determine a violation. Although a criminal statute or conduct may be cited, the level of proof required for disciplinary purposes does not rise to the level required for criminal prosecution.

Suspensions are imposed in calendar days, not work days, and are intended to be served concurrently. Demotions may also be considered as an appropriate disciplinary measure even though they are not specifically designated as a penalty in the Penalty Guidelines. (Consult with designated Secret Service Employee Relations officials for additional guidance.)

Combination of Penalties

In cases where more than one offense is substantiated against an employee, the penalties may be added together. However, in proposing a disciplinary action, the proposing official will not assess multiple penalties where the substantiated charges are essentially restatements of the same misconduct. Further, if an employee commits more than one kind of offense, then the employee may be subject to a higher penalty to include removal, even when one offense, standing alone, would not necessarily result in the higher penalty or removal.

Nexus

The listed offenses apply to all Secret Service personnel regardless of position or title. Law enforcement officials and supervisory personnel may be held to a higher standard of conduct than other employees. The term "on duty" refers to the period when an employee is performing an official duty or acting in an official capacity, whether or not the employee is being paid at the time (e.g., misconduct occurring while an employee is driving an official Government Vehicle (GOV) at the end of the employee's work day, traveling on a commercial carrier while armed, and/or is on official travel, is considered "on duty" for administrative disciplinary purposes).

An employee may be disciplined for misconduct that occurs off duty. In such circumstances, there must be a nexus between the employee's misconduct and the efficiency of the service. A nexus may be established by the effect of the misconduct on the mission of the Secret Service, publicity or notoriety arising from the misconduct, the misconduct's effect on the Secret Service's ability to rely on the integrity, honesty, or judgment of the employee, and other similar and relevant factors.

Senior Executive Service (SES)

Title 5 of the Code of Federal Regulations, section 752.601 provides that members of the SES may not receive an adverse action of less than fifteen days. Accordingly, where the Penalty Guidelines indicate a suspension of one to fourteen days for an offense, that sanction cannot be imposed on an SES employee. When the proposing and deciding officials conclude that an adverse action of more than a three day suspension, but less than a fifteen day suspension is appropriate, an SES employee will generally receive a minimum of a fifteen day suspension. When the proposing and deciding officials conclude that an adverse action of a one day to a three day suspension is appropriate, an SES employee may receive a letter of reprimand rather than a minimum of a fifteen day suspension if, after weighing the heightened behavioral and managerial expectations associated with SES personnel against the facts and circumstances of the case, the deciding official determines that a fifteen day suspension is not appropriate.

Exceptions to the Offense Codes and Penalty Guidelines

The security clearance process is separate from the disciplinary process and this guidance does not apply to security clearance determinations regarding the denial, suspension, or revocation of eligibility for access to classified information. However, as outlined in the Offense Codes, when an employee's Top Secret security clearance has been suspended or revoked, a proposed indefinite suspension may be issued; and when an employee's Top Secret security clearance has been finally revoked by the Security Appeals Board, a proposal to remove the employee from federal service will be issued. Consistent with this guidance, an employee may be subject to disciplinary or adverse action for misconduct that raises security concerns regardless of whether or not the Security Clearance Division takes a security related action in the matter.

The Medical Review Board process is also separate from the disciplinary process and this guidance does not apply to removals proposed by the Medical Review Board based on inability to perform the essential functions of an employee's position due to his or her medical condition.

This guidance also does not apply to performance deficiencies which may be addressed through the use of performance improvement plans (see PER-06(03)), to denials of within-grade increases (see PER-06(04)), or to removal or demotion actions taken under title 5 of the United States Code, chapter 43.

In addition, a matter may be referred to other Secret Service divisions for appropriate action regardless of whether or not disciplinary action is taken. For example, a matter may be referred to the Financial Management Division for the recoupment of monies owed to the government, to the Safety, Health and Environmental Programs Division for a fitness-for-duty or medical examination, and to the Security Clearance Division for review.

Although some offenses may fall within an Offense Code listed in the Table of Penalties, supervisors may consider issuing informal discipline to an employee in certain situations. Supervisors and managers have the responsibility of using good judgment when considering whether informal discipline may be appropriate, based on the totality of the circumstances. The following are examples (not inclusive) of such situations:

- Tardiness – non habitual
- Absent Without Leave – less than one workday
- Appearance Policy – minor violations
- Performance – minor issues that do not affect the mission
- Discourtesy or disruptive behavior– minor, non-habitual violations
- Failure to follow instructions – minor, non-habitual violations
- Failure to follow leave policies – minor, non-habitual violations
- Loss of Government Property valued at $500 or less (non-protective equipment or weapons)
- Loss of Government issued identification or access cards (does not include badges)
- Security Violation (First Offense)

When considering whether other offenses not listed above may not be so severe as to warrant formal discipline, and therefore may be addressed using Informal Discipline (verbal counseling or memorandum of counseling), supervisors and managers should first review the Table of Penalties. Minor offenses for which a Letter of Reprimand is within the mitigated penalty range may be addressed through Informal Discipline.

Appendix B: United States Secret Service Table of Penalties (Penalty Guidelines – Applicable to USSS’s Internal Disciplinary Process)

Penalty Guidelines – Applicable to USSS’s Internal Disciplinary Process

- The listed penalties apply to all USSS personnel, regardless of position or title, except that federal law prohibits an agency from taking a suspension action of less than 15 days against a Senior Executive Service (SES) employee. 5 C.F.R. §752.601. In keeping with that requirement, the Introduction to the Table of Penalties provides that if a non-SES employee would have received a 3 day suspension, the Deciding Official may impose on an SES employee a letter of reprimand or a minimum 15 day suspension, based on the Deciding Official weighing of the facts and circumstances of the case against the heightened behavioral and managerial expectations associated with SES personnel.
- See the Offense Codes for a description of the behavior or actions that define the offenses.

About This Report

The 2015 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey (FEVS) provides employees with the opportunity to influence change in their agencies by submitting feedback about their work environment, leadership and many other aspects of the organization. The FEVS also provides agency leaders with unique insight into workforce issues and trends, and helps them to identify problem areas as well as maintain positive aspects of the agency.

The 2015 Agency Management Report (AMR) was designed to help agency leaders identify these issues and take action to improve them, and it also highlights agency successes that should be acknowledged. Please feel free to share these successes and areas for improvement with your employees.

When reviewing your results, please keep the guidelines below in mind. These guidelines were created to organize your survey results in a way that is easier to digest and interpret.

Understanding Your Results

Percent Positive

The sum of two positive categories (e.g., Strongly Agree/Agree)

Percent Negative

The sum of two negative categories (e.g., Strongly Disagree/Disagree)

Percent Neutral

The neutral category (e.g., Neither Agree nor Disagree)

Identifying Strengths, Challenges and Neutral Findings

65 percent positive or higher is considered a strength

35 percent negative or higher is considered a challenge

30 percent neutral or higher suggests uncertainty, presenting an opportunity for communication between managers and staff

Identifying Increases and Decreases

Movement up or down since the previous year is another important piece of information to consider when examining your results. Any increase or decrease in results can be important; however larger increases or decreases (generally 3 or more percentage points) may be a result of significant changes taking place within the agency and should be examined. Increases indicate positive change that should continue to be reinforced. Decreases, especially in areas considered mission critical, may call for appropriate action to prevent further decline.

A Brief Guide to Using Your Agency Management Report

This section provides suggestions on how to use your FEVS results and includes examples for taking action to help your agency meet its strategic human capital management goals.

Getting Started

Agencies receive many FEVS reports each year, so it can be confusing to know where to start. One suggested starting point is to adopt a strategy based in an action planning framework. This means looking for improvements you have made in previous years while also examining areas of decline. To help you get started, several steps are outlined below, including references to sections of the Agency Management Report (AMR) that you may find useful in helping you to focus on the most critical issues.

Step 1: Use Your AMR to Identify Areas for Improvement

Your AMR provides the tools that can be useful in analyzing your results to find issues most critical to your agency. One way to identify issues is to compare your agency's 2015 results to last year. The Decision Aid - Decreases section provides a quick way to view all of your results that have decreased since 2014. There are many ways to look at your results, and the following sections of the AMR can be valuable resources in illustrating the state of your agency:

Respondent Overview

The Respondent Overview provides a quick snapshot of some interesting demographic results from the respondent population. It offers valuable insight into the makeup of who is responding in your agency and can help inform and guide your recruiting and retention efforts. For example, this section allows you to better understand the ratio of seasoned employees who may be preparing for retirement to newer employees. It is important to keep in mind that this is a survey respondent overview, and these percentages may not match up exactly to your agency's total population characteristics.

Top 10 Positive and Negative Items

Not only does this section display a brief overview of noteworthy results (for use in leadership briefings, agency communications, etc.), it also allows you to quickly determine if there are any underlying themes in the way employees responded to certain items. For example, your agency may want to prioritize issues around communication if multiple survey items related to this subject reside in the Top 10 Negative Items list.

Indices

The Engagement Index, Global Satisfaction Index, and New IQ provide agencies with consistent metrics for measuring progress toward objectives. Benchmarks are included to provide insight into how your agency compares to others, and to encourage information sharing between agencies. For example, some of the top ranking agencies in the Engagement Index may have suggestions on things that have and have not worked to engage their employees. This year, each index also includes a display of trends for each agency component, going as far back as 2012 when available.

Decision Aid

This section is useful in helping you easily identify the most critical issues in your agency as well as recognize where your agency has improved since 2014. The Decision Aid is divided into three sections to help you focus your attention on improvements and declines in your results since last year:

Increases: Contains all items that increased since 2014

Decreases: Contains all items that decreased since 2014

No Change: Contains all items that did not change since 2014

Appendix A and Appendix B

The appendices give you an opportunity to more thoroughly understand your workforce by displaying item-level results. Appendix A shows how well your agency scored relative to others in the government. Scanning the graphs can indicate how your agency is generally performing as well as help you identify particularly strong or weak areas. Appendix B shows a full breakdown of the Work/Life Program results as well as demographic items to provide a more in-depth summary than in the Respondent Overview and Work/Life sections.

Step 2: Develop Your Goals for Improvement

To develop your goals for improvement, you should consider issues that are most critical to your agency and how these issues relate to your strategic goals. It is also important to focus on issues that will provide both short-term, visible, measurable results, and those that will require long-term perspective.

Step 3: Identify Your FEVS Team

This is a crucial step, as your team can make or break your efforts to improve areas of concern and keep strengths strong. It is important that each member of your team is actively engaged in the process and supports its goals. Identifying your team is not just limited to personnel selection. It also includes identifying and pulling together your available resources while being aware of staff interests, capabilities, and agency budget and resources.

Step 4: Develop Your Plan for Action

Once your team has identified its goals, you should develop a list of actions that must be taken to reach these goals. You might also consider soliciting employee input on your plan. Assign staff responsibilities for each action and keep in mind timeframes. Tasks should include start dates, end dates, and measurable milestones. Make sure you get approval for the actions you must take to achieve your agency goals. Remember that leadership buy-in, engagement, and communication is critical to your success.

Step 5: Implement Your Plan

There are many ways to publicize and communicate your intentions to employees, such as all-hands meetings, announcements, intranet/web updates, and social media, to name a few. After your plan is communicated and you have leadership support, you are ready to launch the plan. Communicating early and often ensures staff and leadership are well-informed.

Step 6: Monitor and Evaluate the Results

In addition to measuring your progress along the way and evaluating the success of your plan, it is important that you communicate progress toward goals and final outcomes. Communicating during the entire process provides transparency which can add to staff engagement.

Tips for Taking Action

It can be difficult to know where to start when looking at items with high percent negative ratings. A helpful suggestion is to group items together with common themes and determine if there is a larger category you can target for improvement. For example, if you notice there are several high percent negative items related to communication with supervisors, understanding of job expectations, and fairness of performance appraisals, then it may be a good idea to target the performance management process as an area for improvement in your agency.

Engagement Index

Because the FEVS is an assessment of organizational climate, the Engagement Index does not directly evaluate an employee’s level of engagement. Therefore, instead of measuring “states” of engagement such as focused attention and dedication to completing assignments, this index concentrates on factors that lead to an engaged workforce (e.g., supporting employee development, communicating agency goals).

Below, you can see where your agency’s Engagement Index score ranks (out of 37 departments/large agencies, where Army, Army Corps of Engineers, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Other Defense agencies/activities are rolled into Department of Defense) and how it compares to the governmentwide average. The names of the highest-ranked agencies are listed to facilitate the sharing of information, such as best practices. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has also created the Unlock Talent website (<https://www.unlocktalent.gov>) to share resources and help with interagency communication.

Engagement Benchmarks

This table displays the Engagement Index score for each component in your agency as well as the scores for the three engagement factors, which can facilitate information-sharing within your agency.

Decision Aid: No Change

Identifying Items That Have Not Changed Since 2014

Your percent positive results for these items have not changed since last year. These are items that your agency is maintaining, which can be either a positive, neutral, or negative finding. For example, an item with low percent positive results over several years is a strong indication of a need for focused action. You may also want to consider changing or updating your approach to addressing these issues if the item has been the focus of attention in the past. On the other hand, a trend of stable, high percent positive ratings is a finding that should be celebrated. Look at these items individually to determine whether there may be areas of concern for your agency.

Using the Legend Icons

The legend icons provide context for interpreting these results. While these items have not increased or decreased, they still may be causes for celebration or concern depending on the percent positive, negative, and neutral ratings.

Work/Life Programs

Employee Ratings of Workplace Flexibilities

Work/Life Programs are critical to ensuring employees can effectively balance the demands of the workplace with responsibilities in their personal lives. In addition to being an important recruitment and retention tool, effective work/life programs decrease the burden on employees and help them to focus on the important work they do. Your agency's work/life program participation and satisfaction results are displayed in the following figures.

Special Topic: Engagement

With the continued emphasis on employee engagement across the Federal Government, this section provides a more in-depth analysis of the conditions that lead to engagement. The Engagement Index is broken down by three demographic categories: generations, agency tenure, and the five most common occupational series in your agency in 2015. This year, trend results back to 2012 are also included. This section will help you determine if parts of your workforce are lacking the conditions needed for engagement, which can help guide attention to specific groups. For example, if newer employees have lower scores on the Engagement Index, you might consider the possibility that this group does not know what is expected of it on the job (Q. 6).

Generations

Note: The method of calculating generations was changed in 2015 and applied to previous years, which accounts for any discrepancies between previous results and those displayed here.

Appendix A: Item Results and Benchmarks

For each item, your agency's percent positive response is shown on a 0 to 100 scale, with the triangular arrow indicating where your agency falls. The gray bars represent the range of scores for the 37 departments and large agencies surveyed, where Army, Army Corps of Engineers, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Other Defense agencies/activities are rolled into Department of Defense.

To understand how well your agency performed compared to others, focus on the location of the triangle within the gray bar. If the triangle is toward the right side of the bar, then your agency was above average on that item. If it is at the right edge of the bar, then you had the highest percent positive response for that item. Additionally, you can numerically compare your percent positive to the governmentwide average listed to the right of each item.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE
AND THE OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL
DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

The United States Secret Service (USSS), an organizational component of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), operates within the Department under the authority and responsibilities enumerated in Title VIII, Subtitle C of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, as amended (the Act), and includes those responsibilities described generally in Section 1512 of the Act, as well as in various delegations of authority issued by the Secretary of DHS (the Secretary). The agency's dual statutory missions of protection and criminal investigations are more fully enumerated at Title 18, United States Codes, Section 3056 (Section 3056), and Title 3, United States Code, Section 202 (Section 202), and various other statutes.

The Office of the Inspector General (OIG), an organizational component of DHS, operates within the Department under the authority and responsibilities enumerated in Title VIII, Subtitle B of the Act, as amended, and the Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended, and includes authority and responsibility acquired pursuant to Section 1512 of the Act.

To prevent duplication of effort and ensure the most effective, efficient and appropriate use of resources, the Secret Service and the OIG enter into this Memorandum of Understanding.

The categories of misconduct listed below shall be referred to the OIG. Such referrals shall be transmitted by the USSS Office of Inspection immediately upon the receipt of adequate information or allegations by the USSS Office of Inspection to reasonably conclude that misconduct may have occurred, and no investigation shall be conducted by the USSS Office of Inspection prior to the referral. In cases involving exigent circumstances, if the OIG decides to investigate the allegation but is unable to do so immediately, the USSS Office of Inspection will conduct the investigation until the OIG is able to take it over. In cases not involving exigent circumstances, the OIG will determine within one business day of the referral whether to investigate the allegation itself or to refer the matter back to the USSS Office of Inspection for investigation. If no determination is communicated to the USSS Office of Inspection within one business day of the referral, the USSS Office of Inspection may initiate the investigation. The acceptance of a referral by the OIG reflects a determination that available investigative resources will be able to conclude the referred investigation within a reasonable time. This will afford the agency a reasonable opportunity to act expeditiously, if necessary, regarding the allegations.

- All allegations of criminal misconduct against a USSS employee;
- All allegations of misconduct against employees at the GS-15, GM-15 level or higher, or against employees in the USSS Office of Inspection;
- All allegations regarding misuse or improper discharge of a firearm (other than accidental discharge during training, qualifying or practice);

All allegations of fraud by contractors, grantees or other individuals or entities receiving Department funds or otherwise engaged in the operation of Department programs or operations.

In addition, the IG will investigate allegations against individuals or entities who do not fit into the categories identified above if the allegations reflect systemic violations, such as abuses of civil rights, civil liberties, or racial and ethnic profiling; serious management problems within the Department, or otherwise represent a serious danger to public health and safety.

With regard to categories of misconduct not specified above, the USSS Office of Inspection should initiate investigation upon receipt of the allegation, and shall notify within five business days the OIG's Office of Investigations of such allegation. The OIG shall notify the USSS Office of Inspection if the OIG intends to assume control or become involved in an investigation, but absent such notification, the USSS Office of Inspection shall maintain full responsibility for these investigations.

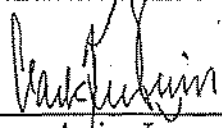

Pursuant to Section 811(a) of the Act, OIG audits, investigations, and subpoenas which, in the Secretary's judgment, constitute a serious threat to the protection of any person or property afforded protection pursuant to Section 3056 or Section 202, or any provision of the Presidential Protection Assistance Act of 1976, may be prohibited. Accordingly, to assure proper and timely responses to OIG requests for information or records, all OIG plans for audits involving the Secret Service shall be communicated via entrance letter by the OIG either directly to the USSS Office of Inspection or to the Office of the Deputy Director; any OIG investigation shall be communicated orally or via e-mail to the same entities. Any Secret Service Headquarters' concern under section 811(a) regarding the scope or direction of a planned audit or investigation will be raised and resolved expeditiously with OIG officials, or immediately communicated to the Secretary in the absence of resolution.

The USSS Office of Inspection shall provide a monthly report to the OIG on all open investigations. In addition, the USSS Office of Inspection, upon request, shall provide the OIG with a complete copy of the Report of Investigation, including all exhibits, at the completion of the investigation. Similarly, the OIG shall provide the USSS Office of Inspection, upon request, with a complete copy of any Report of Investigation relating to the Secret Service, including all exhibits, at the completion of the investigation. The OIG shall have the right to request more frequent or detailed reports on any investigations and to reassert at any time exclusive authority or other involvement over any matter within its jurisdiction.

This MOU shall be effective upon the signature of both parties and shall remain in effect until revoked by one party upon thirty day's written notice to the other.

THE OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

I. Purpose

This directive established Department of Homeland Security (DHS) policy regarding the Office of Inspector General (OIG). Any prior Management Directive and any instruction or agreement of any kind issued by or entered into by any DHS official or Component that is inconsistent in any respect with this directive is hereby superseded to the extent it is inconsistent with this directive.

II. Scope

This directive applies to all DHS organizational elements (OEs), including all employees, contractors, and grantees.

III. Authorities

- A. The Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended
- B. The Homeland Security Act of 2002, as amended, codified in Title 6, US Code

IV. Definitions

- A. OE Offices – As used in this Management Directive, the term OE offices include all Organizational Elements offices of internal affairs, inspections, audits or Professional Responsibility. This term also includes the DHS Office of Security.
- B. DHS Organizational Element – As used in this directive, the term DHS Organizational Element (OE) shall have the meaning given to the term DHS Organizational Element in DHS MD 0010.1, Management Directives System and DHS Announcements. This includes Elements such as the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection, the United States Coast Guard, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, etc. It also includes entities that report to DHS Organizational Elements, such as National Laboratories.

V. Responsibilities

A. The Heads of DHS Organizational Elements shall:

1. Promptly advise the OIG of allegations of misconduct in accordance with the procedures described in Appendix A, and when they become aware of any audit, inspection or investigative work being performed or contemplated within their offices by or on behalf of an OIG from outside DHS, the General Accounting Office, or any other law enforcement authority, unless restricted by law;
2. Ensure that, upon request, OIG personnel are provided with adequate and appropriate office space, equipment, computer support services, temporary clerical support and other services to effectively accomplish their mission;
3. Provide prompt access for auditors, inspectors, investigators, and other personnel authorized by the OIG to any files, records, reports, or other information that may be requested either orally or in writing;
4. Assure the widest possible dissemination of this directive within their OEs. They may issue further instructions as necessary to implement this policy. Any such further instructions shall not conflict with this MD and shall be provided to the OIG immediately upon issuance;
5. Assist in arranging private interviews by auditors, inspectors, investigators, and other officers authorized by the OIG with staff members and other appropriate persons;
6. Advise the OIG when providing classified or sensitive information to the OIG to ensure proper handling.

B. DHS employees shall report suspicions of violations of law or regulation to the DHS Office of Inspector General or the appropriate OE offices, and will likewise:

1. Cooperate fully by disclosing complete and accurate information pertaining to matters under investigation or review;
2. Inform the investigating entity of any other areas or activities they believe require special attention;
3. Not conceal information or obstruct audits, inspections, investigations, or other official inquiries;

4. Be subject to criminal prosecution and disciplinary action, up to and including removal, for knowingly and willfully furnishing false or misleading information to investigating officials; and

5. Be subject to disciplinary action for refusing to provide documents or information or to answer questions posed by investigating officials or to provide a signed sworn statement if requested by the OIG, unless questioned as the subject of an investigation that can lead to criminal prosecution.

VI. Policy and Procedures

A. The OIG, while organizationally a Component of the DHS, operates independent of the DHS and all offices within it. The OIG reports to the Secretary. Under circumstances specified by statute, the Secretary, upon written notification to the OIG which then must be transmitted to Congress, can circumscribe the OIG's access to certain types of sensitive information and exercise of audit, investigative, or other authority. The DHS Inspector General is the head of the OIG.

The OIG is authorized, among other things, to:

1. Administer oaths;
2. Initiate, conduct, supervise and coordinate audits, investigations, inspections and other reviews relating to the programs and operations of the DHS;
3. Inform the Secretary, Deputy Secretary, and the Congress fully and currently about any problems and deficiencies relating to the administration of any DHS program or operation and the need for, and progress of, corrective action;
4. Review and comment on existing and proposed legislation and regulations relating to DHS programs, operations, and personnel;
5. Distribute final audit and inspection reports to appropriate authorizing and oversight committees of the Congress, to all headquarters and field officials responsible for taking corrective action on matters covered by the reports and to Secretarial officers, office heads, and other officials who have an official interest in the subject matter of the report;

6. Receive and investigate complaints or information from employees, contractors, and other individuals concerning the possible existence of criminal or other misconduct constituting a violation of law, rules, or regulations, a cause for suspension or debarment, mismanagement, gross waste of funds, abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to the public health and safety, and report expeditiously to the Attorney General whenever the Inspector General has reasonable grounds to believe there has been a violation of Federal criminal law;

7. Protect the identity of any complainant or anyone who provides information to the OIG, unless the OIG determines that disclosure of the identity during the course of the investigation is unavoidable.

Further, the OIG shall:

8. Follow up on report recommendations to ensure that corrective actions have been completed and are effective;

9. Prepare a semiannual report to the Secretary and the Congress, summarizing OIG audit and investigative activities within DHS. Section 5(a) of the Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended, requires this report.

B. Allegations received by the OIG or OE offices shall be retained or referred in accordance with Appendix A of this MD. The only exception to this requirement is that the OIG and the United States Secret Service will adhere to the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding entered into between those two entities on December 8, 2003, and as may be amended from time to time.

C. Standards. Audits shall be conducted consistent with the standards issued by the Comptroller General of the United States. Inspections and investigations shall be conducted consistent with the quality standards issued by the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency (PCIE).

D. Questions or Concerns. Any questions or concerns regarding this directive should be addressed to the OIG.

The categories of misconduct identified below shall be referred to the OIG. Such referrals shall be transmitted by the OE offices immediately upon receipt of the allegation, and no investigation shall be conducted by the OE offices prior to referral unless failure to do so would pose an imminent threat to human life, health or safety, or result in the irretrievable loss or destruction of critical evidence or witness testimony. In such extraordinary situations, the OIG will be contacted as soon as practical, and all information and evidence collected by the OE office shall then be provided to the OIG as part of the OE referral to the OIG. The OIG will accept and retain all such allegations for investigation subsumed under this exigent circumstance exception.

- All allegations of criminal misconduct against a DHS employee;
- All allegations of misconduct against employees at the GS-15, GM-15 level or higher, or against employees in the OE offices;
- All allegations of serious, noncriminal misconduct against a law enforcement officer. "Serious, noncriminal misconduct" is conduct that, if proved, would constitute perjury or material dishonesty, warrant suspension as discipline for a first offense, or result in loss of law enforcement authority. For purposes of this directive, a "law enforcement officer" is defined as any individual who is authorized to carry a weapon, make arrests, or conduct searches;
- All instances regarding discharge of a firearm that results in death or personal injury or otherwise warrants referral to the Civil Rights Criminal Division of the Department of Justice;
- All allegations of fraud by contractors, grantees or other individuals or entities receiving DHS funds or otherwise engaged in the operation of DHS programs or operations;
- All allegations of visa fraud by DHS employees working in the visa issuance process.

In addition, the OIG will investigate allegations against individuals or entities that do not fit into the categories identified above if the allegations reflect systemic violations, such as abuses of civil rights, civil liberties, or racial and ethnic profiling, serious management problems within the department, or otherwise represent a serious danger to public health and safety.

APPENDIX A

With regard to categories not specified above, the OE offices will initiate the investigation upon receipt of the allegation, and shall notify within five business days the OIG's Office of Investigations of such allegations. The OIG shall notify the OE offices if the OIG intends to assume control over or become involved in such an investigation, but absent such notification, the OE office shall maintain full responsibility for these investigations.

Any allegations received by the OIG that do not come within the categories specified above, or that the OIG determines not to investigate, will be referred within five business days of receipt of the allegation by the OIG to the appropriate OE office along with any confidentiality protections deemed necessary by the OIG.

The OE offices shall provide monthly reports to the OIG on all open investigations. In addition, upon request, the OE offices shall provide the OIG with a complete copy of the Report of Investigation, including all exhibits, at the completion of the investigation. Similarly, the OIG shall provide the OE offices, upon request, with a complete copy of any Report of Investigation relating to its OE, including all exhibits, at the completion of the investigation. The OIG shall have the right to request more frequent or detailed reports on any investigations and to reassert at any time exclusive authority or other involvement over any matter within its jurisdiction.

Executive Summary

The United States Secret Service (Secret Service) is one of the oldest federal law enforcement agencies in the country and ranks among the most elite in the world. Through its highly trained and dedicated workforce comprised of special agents, Uniformed Division (UD) officers, and Administrative, Technical, and Professional (APT) staff, the Secret Service delivers mission success. The Secret Service continuously assesses and realigns this workforce to meet operational priorities in the areas of protection, protective intelligence, and criminal investigations. This investment in human capital is significant, as it represents 70 percent of the organization's budget.

Our century and a half of experience has taught us that the security threats facing our Nation's leaders, financial systems, and critical infrastructure will continue to evolve. Our mission and responsibilities to the President of the United States, to the Department of Homeland Security, and to the public demand that we anticipate threats and deploy a highly skilled workforce to proactively address them.

In our effort to address this ever-changing threat environment, the Secret Service has conducted a review of recent trends impacting its workforce. From FY 2011 through FY 2013, the Secret Service experienced a reduction in overall staffing levels from 7,024 to 6,480 positions. This decline resulted from the Secret Service limiting all hiring to address budgetary payroll erosion and the anticipated impacts of Federal budget constraints.

While staffing levels have declined in recent years, the organization's work requirements have not. The Secret Service has adjusted to reduced staffing levels by prioritizing activities and shifting resources to address critical protection needs. All employee categories have been impacted: UD officers are experiencing leave restrictions and the elimination of training; special agents are experiencing greater travel demands; and APT personnel are experiencing increases in workload.

The Human Capital Plan contained in the following pages sets out the agency's efforts to address increasing work requirements and emerging threats while maintaining current resource levels. The objective in FY 2014 – 2015 is to stop and reverse attrition experienced since FY 2013. The objective in FY 2016 – FY 2018 is to maintain the level of effort required in a constantly evolving threat environment with current resources due to the uncertainty of the future fiscal situation.

The staffing adjustment necessary to continue to meet mission requirements while functioning at the FY 2013 level will impact employee mission readiness. Every employee, at every grade level and in every job series, contributes to the Secret Service's integrated mission. Restricting the agency's ability to recruit, train, deploy and retain a diverse and committed workforce will be felt throughout the organization. This Human Capital Plan provides the foundation of our efforts to appropriately support our integrated mission in the face of resource constraints.

I. Legislative Language

This Human Capital Plan (FY 2014 – FY 2018) is submitted in response to a requirement set forth in House report 113-91 that accompanies the Fiscal Year (FY) 2014 Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Appropriations Act (P.L. 113-76).

“[The] Committee directs the Secret Service to provide a strategic human capital plan not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act for fiscal years 2014 through 2018, which addresses how mission requirements will be met with current resources and delineates between protective and investigative missions.”

II. Background

Historical Secret Service Staffing Levels and Impacts

Period of FY 2007 through FY 2011

From FY 2007 through FY 2011, the Secret Service experienced an increase in protective mission requirements comparable to the current operational demands. These increases began in FY 2007 with a detail assigned to then-Senator Obama, the need to establish a post-presidency protective detail for then-President George W. Bush, and the expanded resource needs associated with President Obama's and Vice President Biden's immediate families. Additionally, the evolving threat environment required the expansion of capabilities in protective intelligence, counter surveillance, counter assault, and other specialized protective programs. To address these needs, Secret Service staffing levels grew from 6,513 FTE (6,622 positions) in FY 2007 to 6,905 FTE (7,024 positions) in FY 2011.

Period of FY 2012 through FY 2013

As the Secret Service entered FY 2012, the budget environment became increasingly complex. The organization was facing a constrained fiscal environment and identified a staffing affordability issue. Over many years, the Secret Service funded payroll costs at the expense of critical non-pay investments such as operational travel, mission readiness training, and integrated information technology stabilization and modernization.

Notably, the costs associated with nearly identical FTE levels in FY 2009 and FY 2013 increased by almost $120 million. Much of this cost increase is attributed to a maturing, more experienced workforce during a time of very limited hiring. FTE cost drivers from FY 2009 thru FY 2013 included increases to employee basic salaries resulting from within-grade step increases, career ladder promotions, premium pay, personnel benefits including health insurance and FERS contributions, and the costs associated with Uniformed Division modernization. Due to this payroll erosion and the budget constraints of sequestration, the Secret Service was forced to shed FTE to achieve affordable levels while maintaining its protective mission requirements. The Secret Service has instituted processes to avoid this issue in the future.

Since the end of FY 2011, the total number of the Secret Service employees has declined by approximately 333 FTE (550 positions). The Secret Service has 211 fewer special agents, 98 fewer UD officers and 235 fewer support personnel. As the following chart highlights, the current staffing levels have steadily declined since the peak achieved in FY 2011.

III. Human Capital Plan FY 2014 – FY 2018

As part of its comprehensive workforce plan to address retirement rates, attrition rates, and mission requirements, the Secret Service has identified strategic hiring and deployment objectives to meet current and future staffing requirements. The Secret Service has developed a workforce plan to align staffing resources with its mission requirements – both in the near-term (FY 2014 and FY 2015) and for the longer term (FY 2016-FY 2018).

With the funding provided in the FY 2014 Omnibus Appropriations bill and in the FY 2015 President’s budget request, there is increased budget certainty over the next 18 months that allows the Secret Service to renew its hiring efforts in FY 2014 and FY 2015. To address Congressional concerns, the Secret Service will hire to replace attrition. Achieving an FTE target of 6,572 (FY 2015 President’s Budget) requires hiring on average four to five special agent classes, three to four UD classes, and 110 APT personnel annually to replace the average projected attrition per year of 120 special agents, 75 UD, and 110 APT personnel.

Attrition Replacement Hiring Requirements (Positions)
	Special Agents	Uniformed Officers	APT	Total
Attrition Replacement Hiring Average projected per year Attrition	120	75	110	305

The Secret Service must hire above the attrition rate to achieve the FY 2013 staffing level of 6,572 FTE (FY 2015 President's Budget) because end of fiscal year position count associated with this level of FTE was 6,480. Given that new special agent and UD officers require seven months of specialized law enforcement training prior to beginning their assignments, the benefit of many of these additional hires from FY 2014 through FY 2015 will not be fully realized until mid FY 2015 to early FY 2016. Therefore, the Secret Service will continue to experience the impact felt in FY 2012 - FY 2013 with reduced staffing levels until the new hires are fully trained and deployed. In other words, while the Secret Service expenditures will reflect increases in FTE achieved for the year due to salaries paid to employees in training, these employees will not begin addressing mission requirements until they are placed in their assignments.

From FY 2016 – FY 2018, the Secret Service will continue to hire to address attrition and maintain FY 2013 staffing levels. Maintaining staffing at the FY 2013 level from FY 2016 – FY 2018 creates significant mission impacts as level of effort must keep pace with evolving threats but do so at end of year position levels similar to those experienced in FY 2007. The variable nature of protection and investigation demands means that a staffing tipping point is hard to determine, but assessing the impacts of the current workloads on staff demonstrates that the Secret Service will have to continue to make adjustments in favor of the Secret Service's protective demands. In order to meet the protective demand, the investigative output would decrease. In order to manage surges in the protection workload, leave restrictions would have to be put in place for all employees and training restricted. Both protective and investigative productivity would decline due to employee burnout and a smaller pool of APT personnel providing support to operations.

Period of FY 2014

The Secret Service typically loses approximately 300 positions annually to attrition, both as retirements and non-retirement separations. Currently, 10.6 percent of the special agents and 15.4 percent of the UD workforce are eligible to retire. Over the next five years, these numbers are expected to increase to approximately 31.2 percent of the special agent workforce and 23.2 percent of the UD workforce. Beyond special agents and UD officers, the percent of Secret Service's APT workforce that can retire is expected to increase from 17 percent to nearly 33 percent the next five years.

Apart from retirements, the Secret Service is also experiencing employees separating from the agency to pursue other career opportunities. Taking into account the voluntary separation and the projected retirement rate, approximately 3.4 percent of the special agent workforce, 5.3 percent of the UD workforce, and 6.0 percent of APT personnel will separate from the Secret Service over the next five years. This is assuming that overall annual attrition at the Secret Service remains constant at approximately 300 positions per year.

Starting in FY 2014, the Secret Service will hire at a level that begins addressing attrition experienced in FY 2013 and anticipated attrition in FY 2014. The Secret Service has established a hiring goal of four special agent classes (96 special agents), six UD classes (144 UD officers) and 110 APT personnel in FY 2014 to address attrition. Of the total 350 positions, 153 positions are attributed to the $25.6 million in additional resources provided in the FY 2014 Omnibus Appropriations bill that addresses the Secret Service’s current rate of attrition.

PPA	$	Positions
Protection of Persons and Facilities	$ 13.6 M	72 (24 SA/ 48 UD)
Domestic Field Operations	$ 8.6 M	54 (24 SA/30 APT)
Headquarters, Management, and Administration	$ 3.4 M	27 (27 APT)
Total	$ 25.6 M	153 (48 SA/48 UD/57 APT)

Critical Uniformed Division Staffing

The UD is particularly vulnerable to personnel fluctuations. Given both the fixed and variable nature of their work requirements, very few options exist to compensate for a shortage of officers. The fixed portion of the work requirement is the standard posts established to protect the White House Complex, Vice President’s Residence and Foreign Missions in the Washington metropolitan area. The variable nature of the mission involves specialized support for explosive detection, emergency response, counter sniper, and magnetometer operations required when protectees travel within Washington, DC, throughout the United States, and overseas.

A recent staffing analysis identified a very strong correlation between overtime and the travel requirements necessary to fulfill the variable portion of UD work requirements. At the current staffing level, any variable requirements result either in overtime expenditures, to staff the travel itself or to backfill the fixed post requirements.

While the average projected attrition per year for special agents is 120 and for UD is 75, the Secret Service is transferring part of the attrition replacement effort of special agents to UD to address the current UD staffing shortfall. The planned attrition replacement hiring in FY 2014 is 96 special agents and 144 Uniformed Division officers.

Counter Surveillance and Critical Systems Program

In FY 2014, the Secret Service formalized a Counter Surveillance Division (CSD) and grew the Critical Systems Protection Program (CSP). CSD required 66 permanent special agents to directly support counter surveillance activities in the Washington, D.C. area. The Secret Service utilizes counter surveillance as a component of its layered security plan to detect, identify, and mitigate potential threat actors prior to initiation of an actual attack. This program is critical to supporting the White House Complex and the frequent Presidential visits throughout the area.

An additional 24 permanent special agents were reassigned to fulfill needs within the Critical Systems Protection Program (CSP). CSP’s mission is to identify and mitigate risk associated with information systems as they affect persons and venues protected by the Secret Service or the implementation of a Secret Service-led security plan. These CSP agents deploy a range of advanced technologies to monitor and counter threats that exist in cyberspace that seek to access and/or manipulate secure networks at the White House Complex, the Executive Offices of the President and at sites visited by the President and Vice President.

Hiring for attrition replacement in FY 2014 helps rebalance the number of special agents in the field since 90 special agents were shifted from the field and re-assigned to CSD or CSP.

Specifically, agents hired in 2014 under attrition replacement will be assigned to various field offices.

Period of FY 2015

In FY 2015, the Secret Service will continue to hire for attrition replacement and rebalance its workforce to address priority needs. The FY 2015 hiring will also begin to address the backfill of special agents needed to replace the senior agents who will be moved to staff the former President Obama Protective Detail (OPD). The FY 2015 President’s Budget accommodates necessary personnel cost inflation estimates and funds Secret Service activities at a sustainable level that matches inflation-adjusted averages for travel, procurement of equipment and other critical non-pay investments. The Secret Service has established a hiring goal of seven special agent classes (168 special agents), eight Uniformed Division classes (192 Uniformed Division officers) and 148 APT personnel in FY 2015 to meet both attrition replacement and to reach the budgeted staffing level. To meet and maintain the FTE level in the FY 2015 budget, the Secret Service must hire at a rate above the annual attrition replacement level of 305 positions. The level of hiring above attrition replacement will strategically address gaps in the special agent, UD, and APT workforce and support the partial start-up staffing requirements of a post-presidency protective detail for President Obama at the end of his term in office as depicted in the chart below.

Notes: ⁱUD restoration hiring includes replacing 34 officers lost due to internal transfers.

ⁱⁱⁱAnnual Attrition Replacement Hiring is 272 instead of 305 due to strategic priority hiring of UD officers.

Critical Uniformed Division Staffing

Due to declining staff levels, UD officers lost an average of 3.25 of their 8 days off per month, and training hours were reduced by 88 percent starting in FY 2013. Similar to FY 2014, a majority of the planned hiring in FY 2015 is concentrated in addressing the current UD staffing shortfall. The proposed hiring over FY 2014 and FY 2015 for UD will provide a more sustainable staffing level to relieve some leave restrictions and reduce overtime. It is important to note that due to the length of training required, the effect of these hires will not be felt until FY 2015 and FY 2016.

Targeted Priority Administrative, Professional, and Technical Staff Hiring

During FY 2015, the Secret Service plans to hire an additional 38 APT employees above attrition replacement hiring (110 positions) for restoration. While targeted priority APT hiring would include some administrative support personnel, most of the hiring is focused on positions that take part in mission activities or directly support command and control capabilities.

Former President Obama Detail (OPD)

The Secret Service is required (18 U.S.C. § 3056(a) (3)) to provide protection to all former Presidents and their spouses for life, unless that protection is declined. Consequently, the Secret Service anticipates establishing a post-presidency protective detail for President Obama at the end of his term in office. The Obama Protective Division (OPD) must be fully staffed, trained and positioned by January 20, 2017. The OPD will be responsible for the protection of the former First Lady and at least one minor child as set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3056(a) (3) and (4).

The OPD will require 108 special agent personnel to staff the permanent detail, conduct protective advances, analyze protective intelligence, coordinate security plans with law enforcement counterparts, and provide other protective support. In addition, 30 APT personnel will be required to provide residence security, as well as administrative and technical support to the protective division. To fully staff this new protective division, new special agents must be recruited and trained so that they can be assigned to field offices while agents that are more senior move to OPD. To meet the necessary timeline, the Secret Service must begin the hiring of these new special agents in the fourth quarter of FY 2015. These individuals will be trained and deployed by the fourth quarter of FY 2016, which coincides with the high operational requirements of the nominating conventions and the final months of the 2016 Presidential Campaign.

The FY 2015 President's Budget covers the partial start-up staffing requirements of OPD beginning in the fourth quarter of FY 2015 with funding ($4.0 million) to hire 81 special agents. The FY 2015 funding only supports salary and training costs for these personnel, with the costs to equip and outfit these personnel and hire the remaining personnel (57 positions) deferred until FY 2016.

Period of FY 2016 - FY 2018

As outlined in the previous section, the FY 2015 President's Budget covers the partial start-up staffing requirements of the post-presidency protective detail for President Obama (OPD) beginning in the fourth quarter of FY 2015 by supporting the hiring of 81 special agents. It is anticipated that the remaining staff requirements will be covered in FY 2016. This staff increase brings the Secret Service's staffing level to 6,690 FTE (6,724 positions) by FY 2017 as shown in the chart below.

In addition to establishing OPD, the Secret Service must also prepare to meet the operational demands of the upcoming 2016 Presidential Campaign. To manage mission requirements with current resources, the Secret Service may need to temporarily shift resources from field offices at a higher rate than usual, continue to partially restrict training and leave for UD, and continue to require special agents and UD to cover the work shortage from a decreased APT level. The mission impacts from maintaining the FTE target of 6,690 are discussed below.

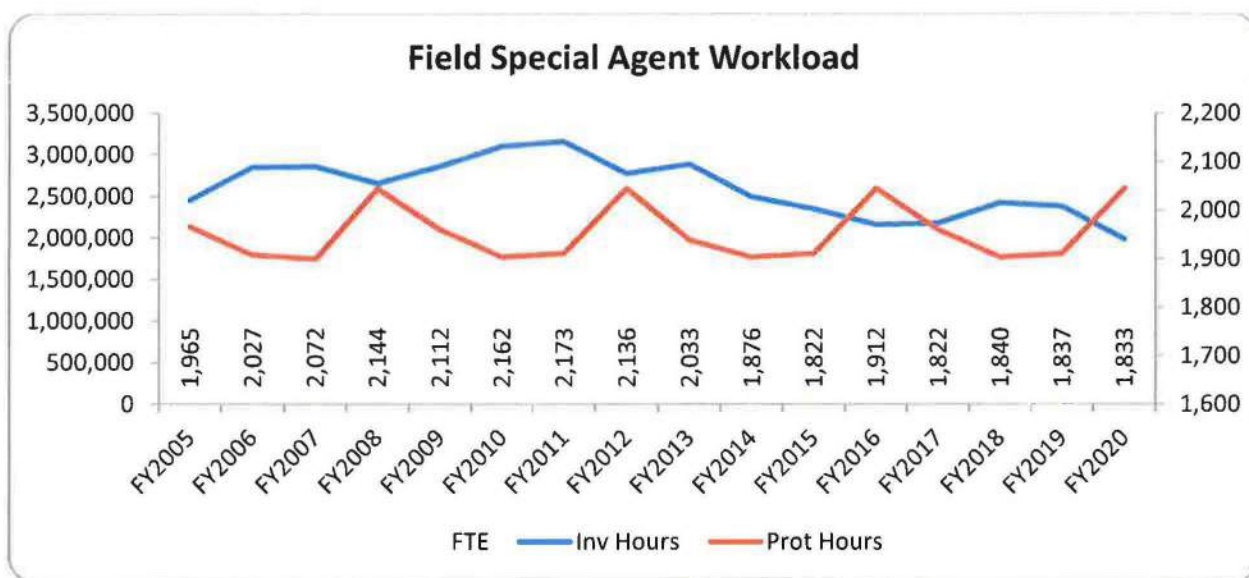

Impact on the Secret Service's Protection Mission

Maintaining the FTE target of 6,690 will be done at the expense of mission readiness by decreasing training and restricting leave. Leave and training restrictions are driven by mission activities, so certain restrictions are standard practice. For example, there are leave restrictions during the summer and from August through September for the United Nations General Assembly. As UD staffing levels declined from 1,396 FTE (1,420 positions) in FY 2011 to 1,343 FTE (1,322 positions) by end of FY 2013, the Secret Service began utilizing various methods to cover required assignments, while trying to control overtime expenditures. These methods included the elimination of training, the imposition of more leave restrictions, and the shifting of officers from other programs to cover critical posts. While these practices have mitigated some overtime costs, they are unsustainable long-term and negatively impact operations. The UD hiring planned for FY 2014 and FY 2015 will provide a more sustainable staffing level of 1,457.

Impact on the Secret Service's Investigative Mission

Special agents assigned to full-time protective details spend all of their time on protection, while special agents assigned to the field spend part of their time on protection and part of their time on investigations. In maintaining the FTE target of 6,690, any surge in protection demand would require the number of special agents on permanent protective details or in permanent protective functions to increase. To ensure that protection requirements are fully staffed at all times, the Secret Service would absorb attrition vacancies in field offices to cover protection assignments. This decrease in staffing would continue to impact investigations.

It is important to reiterate that, in addition to the investigative mission, the protective mission also suffers if staffing levels fall because field agents are forced to work more overtime and travel more to make up for the loss in staffing. This level of activity increases fatigue and reduce the amount of time available to develop and sustain long-term investigations. This decrease in investigative output occurs at a time when the Secret Service is experiencing an increase in the level of complexity of cyber data breach and financial crime investigations. The chart below depicts the degradation of investigative output across full campaign cycles because field agents must meet protective requirements regardless of a reduced staffing level.

Significant decreases in critical investigative functions can be expected if field levels are allowed to continue to drop as field resources shift to cover emerging protective threats. The projected average yearly output in hours from FY2014-FY2018 compared with the previous five years, during which time field office staffing reached their peak levels, would decrease 21.7 percent. A loss in investigative capacity would affect the amount of U.S. counterfeit currency seized, the amount of fraud loss prevented, the number of counterfeit arrests worldwide, and other activities the Secret Service performs to identify, locate, and apprehend criminal organizations and individuals targeting the Nation’s critical financial infrastructure and payment systems. This decline in investigative output comes at a time when criminal investigations are becoming more complex and transnational in nature.

Impact on the Secret Service’s Special Agent Population

Special agents support both the protective and investigative mission as they advance through the phases of their career. They begin their careers in Secret Service field offices as Phase 1 agents, where they receive significant on-the-job training. Ideally, over the course of six to nine years, special agents develop skills by participating in assignments of increasing complexity and responsibility in the areas of investigation, protective intelligence, and protective mission support. After they have developed significant expertise in the areas of advance planning, site security, protective intelligence investigations and specialized technology, they are eligible to enter Phase 2 of their careers, which are permanent protective assignments.

As Phase 2 special agents, all of their work is protection related. They experience significant travel in support of the mission, maintain a very high pace of activity and stress, and are subject to ever-changing work schedules. After four to five years in their Phase 2 assignments, special agents then enter Phase 3 of their career with an assignment to Headquarters, the James J. Rowley Training Center, or a field office. For the remainder of their career, they work in a variety of operational assignments across the organization, with some special agents advancing to supervisory and executive ranks.

The limited hiring of special agents means that fewer will be properly prepared for protective assignments in future years. As a result, the Secret Service will be forced to staff assignments with employees who have gained less operational experience than is preferred. By FY 2018, over 50 percent of those special agents who will be transferred to a permanent protection detail will have four or fewer years of experience if the current trends continue.

The rate at which Phase 1 special agents are re-assigned to a Phase 2 protection assignment is driven by mission activities. With protection demands growing as the complexity of threats evolve, that rate at which Phase 1 special agents are re-assigned to a Phase 2 protection assignment might outpace the rate of attrition replacement given that new special agents require seven months of specialized law enforcement training prior to beginning their assignments. This shift would affect the field office Phase 1 special agent staffing levels, and the Secret Service might have to use a combination of Phase 1 and Phase 3 special agents to staff permanent protection assignments. If Phase 3 special agents are re-assigned to a Phase 2 protection assignment, they are moving backwards in terms of career progression. Potential attrition among Phase 3 special agents may rise as opportunities for career progression diminish, special agents experience burnout from the repeated high pace of protection assignments, and opportunities to enter the Secret Service SES program become more competitive.

Impact on Administrative, Professional, and Technical Personnel

The final major employee category in the Secret Service is APT. This category of Secret Service employee has declined by 183 FTE (235 positions) since FY 2011. It is important to note that the majority of APT personnel perform duties that directly support operational mission. Three out of four APT positions are law enforcement support positions (e.g., weapon carrying special officers, physical security specialists and protective support technicians) or critical operational support (e.g., protective intelligence research specialists, investigative research specialists, and communication and information technology specialists).

A lack of APT personnel amounts to about 83 thousand work hours annually that is unavailable. To absorb this decreased support, the Secret Service has shifted resources from critical front line operations to cover requirements, preventing the organization from deploying personnel with significant subject matter expertise in protective technology and critical command and control capabilities.

V. Conclusion

As an employer, the Secret Service operates in a challenging environment. Executing the Secret Service's mission requires significant human capital resources, with employee costs representing approximately 70 percent of the agency's budget. Demographic patterns and increasing operational demands in a constrained budget environment necessitate an effective and comprehensive human capital strategy.

To address the declining Secret Service staffing levels and sustain the investigative and protective workloads, additional staffing is necessary to replace normal attrition. For the near-term (FY 2014 and FY 2015), the Secret Service has developed a workforce plan to address attrition replacements with current resources. Maintaining staffing levels at 6,690 FTE, however, will present gaps in mission execution. For the longer term (FY 2016-FY 2018), the Secret Service plans to maintain the current level of effort in an uncontrolled threat environment, but there may be impacts on the Secret Service's integrated mission. The Secret Service will continue to evaluate its programmatic and associated staffing requirements. Any revised staffing requirements will be identified in future budget submissions.

Subject: Federal Law Enforcement of Selected Financial and Computer Crimes

This memorandum responds to your request for the statutory authority of specified federal law enforcement entities over selected crimes of a financial or computer nature. We identified these statutes in LexisNexis’s U.S. Code Service database, but limited our searches to Titles 11 (Bankruptcy), 12 (Banks and Banking), 15 (Commerce and Trade), 18 (Crimes and Criminal Procedure), 28 (Judiciary and Judicial Procedure), and 31 (Money and Finance). Please note that some statutes appear in more than one Table. Also please note that we did not include any statutes involving the Securities Exchange or the Internal Revenue Service.

Table 1 lists statutes regarding the Secret Service or Department of Homeland Security, selected by searching variations of text(Secret Service) or text((homeland security) w/20 investigat!).

Table 2 lists statutes regarding the FBI or Attorney General, selected by searching variations of text(federal bureau of investigation or FBI) or text((attorney general) w/20 investigat!).

Table 3 lists statutes regarding the Secretary or Department of the Treasury, selected by searching variations of text((secretary w/3 treasury) w/20 investigat!), or text(("Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence") or (Financial Crimes Enforcement Network) or fincen).

Table 4 lists statutes regarding Treasury and its component agencies; the Secret Service or Homeland Security; and the FBI, Attorney General, or Department of Justice. They were selected by searching variations of text((secretary) w/p (secret service) w/p ("attorney general" or "federal bureau of investigation" or fbi)), or text((treasury) and (secret service) and ("attorney general" or "federal bureau of investigation" or fbi)) or text((secretary w/3 "homeland security") and (secretary w/3 treasury) and ("attorney general" or fbi or "federal bureau of investigation")), or text((treasury) and ("homeland security") and ("attorney general" or "federal bureau of investigation" or fbi)), or text((treasury) and ("homeland security") and (justice)).

For additional information on investigative authorities of various federal agencies by statute, see the United States Attorneys’ Manual, Statutes Assigned by Citation available online at <http://www.justice.gov/usam/usam-9-4000-statutes-assigned-citation>. Moreover, please be aware that published and/or internal regulations may convey additional or greater authority than statutory results stipulate. Finally, although we made every attempt to be comprehensive, some relevant statutes may not have come up in our searches.

Information in this memorandum is of general interest to Congress. As such, this information may be provided to other congressional requesters, and may be published in CRS products for general distribution to Congress at a later date. In any case, your confidentiality as a requester would be preserved.
