I'm shocked that the administration is even considering delaying or rolling back the fiduciary rules.

Yes, it may be a disruption to "business as usual" but people voted for President Trump expecting that he'd be a disrupter, and also expecting that he'd be looking out for regular people, rather than the elites and special interests.

Please implement these rules now. I'm sure that smart folks in the financial services industry will figure out ways to still make money while actually helping people at the same time.
