

Kayla M. Williams is a senior policy researcher at the RAND Corporation. Her research focus areas include optimizing policies and programs to support veterans and military personnel. She came to RAND from the Department of Veterans Affairs, where she served as Assistant Secretary of Public and Intergovernmental Affairs. She was previously a senior fellow and director of the Military, Veterans, and Society Program at Center for a New American Security and prior to that served as director of the Center for Women Veterans at VA.

Williams previously spent eight years at RAND researching servicemember and veteran health needs and benefits, international security, and intelligence policy. Williams served on the VA Advisory Committee on Women Veterans; her recognitions include 2013 White House Woman Veteran Champion of Change and 2015 Lincoln Award recipient. She was enlisted in the U.S. Army for five years.