The President's Cancer Panel, a three-member advisory group that oversees the National Cancer Program, reports annually to the President of the U.S. on barriers to the program's execution. "Facing Cancer in Indian Country: The Yakama Nation and Pacific Northwest Tribes," contains the findings and recommendations of the Panel after a two-day meeting in July 2002. The meeting was held at the invitation of a Yakama tribal elder on the reservation of the Confederated Tribes and Bands of the Yakama Nation in Washington State. The Panel's then-chairman, Dr. Harold P. Freeman, heard from cancer survivors and caregivers from Yakama and several other northwest tribes. Other speakers included Native and non-Native health care and social service providers; officials of the Indian Health Service (IHS); community epidemiologists and researchers; and advocates. The report cites studies that show during the past 30 years Native American cancer incidence and mortality rates have been increasing, and that American Indian and Alaskan Native cancer survival rates are the lowest of any ethnic group. 12/2003

- Living Beyond Cancer: Finding a New Balance P986
This report of the President's Cancer Panel, an advisory group to the President of the United States, is the first to take a life span approach to describing cancer survivorship issues, focusing particularly on the post-treatment period. In addition to identifying issues common to people regardless of their age at diagnosis, it enumerates challenges specific to those diagnosed as children (ages 0-14 years), adolescents and young adults (ages 15-29 years), adults (30-59 years of age), and older adults (ages 60 and older). The findings and 17 recommendations are drawn from testimony received at five meetings conducted between May 2003 and January 2004, as well as additional data gathering. The nearly 200 meeting participants included survivors, caregivers, health care providers, advocates, and others who candidly described their experiences of life after cancer and the issues of providing care and support. Testimony was provided both in formal hearings and at evening Town Hall meetings. 05/2004

How to place an order

NCI publications are free. However, there is a shipping and handling fee of 10 cents per copy for orders over 20 items (bulk orders). To cover the basic accounting costs associated with processing payments for bulk orders, NCI requires a $5 minimum charge. A discount is applied for orders of 100 or more items.

To ensure that publications are available to all requesters, we may set limits on the maximum number of copies that may be ordered. The number of copies of an individual title that may be ordered depends on the supply in our inventory.

Orders for NCI publications can be placed by Internet, phone or TTY, mail, and fax.
