The Honorable Arnold Schwarzenegger
Governor of California
State Capitol Building
Sacramento, CA 95814

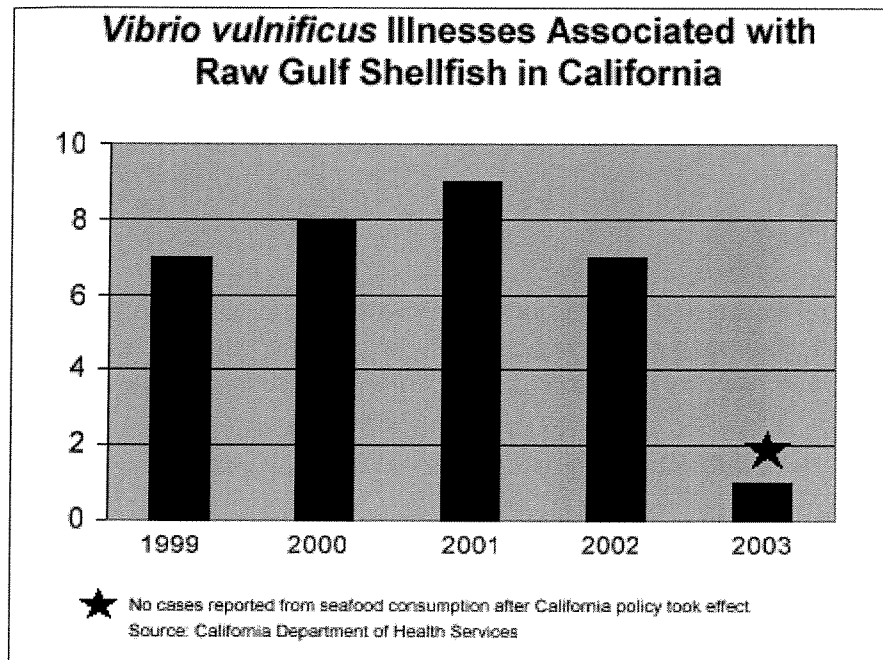

Dear Governor Schwarzenegger:

According to press accounts, you are considering revising California's policy banning the sale of raw, untreated Gulf Coast oysters during the summer months.¹ I urge you not to do so. The reason is simple: this policy saves lives.

Prior to last summer, several Californians became critically ill or died annually from the devastating effects of Vibrio vulnificus, a bacteria that contaminates Gulf Coast oysters and can cause overwhelming infection. Last summer, however, not a single Californian became ill from consuming Gulf Coast oysters after the ban took effect, as shown by the chart below. By contrast, outside of California, 21 people became ill and 9 people died from Vibrio vulnificus infections in 2003.²

¹Associated Press, Oystermen Cite Mad Cow Cases as Evidence of Unfair Treatment (Feb. 11, 2004).

²U.S. Food and Drug Administration, Shellfish-Related Vibrio vulnificus Cases/Deaths, 2003 (Jan. 29, 2004).

California's current policy requires post-harvest treatment to reduce bacterial contamination in Gulf Coast oysters sold in the summer months. As Sen. Barbara Boxer and I wrote last summer in a letter to the Interstate Shellfish Sanitation Conference, California's policy not only protects public health, it also makes economic sense.³ An economic analysis by the Research Triangle Institute found that this post-harvest treatment can be expected to increase consumer confidence and generate more revenues than costs for oyster producers.⁴

It makes no sense to go backwards on California's policy and put lives at risk. I urge you to maintain California's current policy.

Sincerely,

Henry A. Waxman
Ranking Minority Member
