INTRODUCTION

The US Forest Service is supportive of Executive Order 13112 requiring Federal agencies to provide for restoration of native species. A reliable, stable, and economical supply of native plant materials is essential. These materials may be obtained through partnerships and commerce, through nurseries and wildland seed sources and other natural areas. This directory is needed to locate native plant materials to aid in restoring habitat conditions for ecosystems that have been invaded by invasive plants.

Comprehensive information was collected from Forest Service employees, state plant societies, native plant non governmental organizations, nurseries and literature and internet research. This information was compiled into a directory of companies in the Eastern United States that supply native plant materials and seeds. The directory is organized alphabetically by suppliers with contact information and specific plant materials available. Companies are indexed alphabetically by state. Genetic variability and source identification may be obtained by contacting the vendors.

The directory will guide foresters and landowners in selecting regional and local plant materials for ecosystem restoration. Vendors should identify the source of the parent material to select local ecoregion plants. The best available information to select genetically appropriate native plant materials for the site and situation should be used whenever possible. This will help improve availability of better quality native plant materials.
