

The Federal Trade Commission

Made in the U.S.A labeling should remain as is!
 to identify products made in the United States. This means all or virtually all parts of the product were made in the United States and all labor needed to produce the product was performed in the United States.

To broaden the definition or change it in any way will be a great disservice to the American people: What about child labor, poor working conditions and pay for products made in "third world countries."

Quality is generally not as good and the purchase cost to the consumer is the same if not more than products
made in the United States.
