To whom it may concern,

I am against changing the requirements for marking "made in the U.S.A." It is deceiving to the American public to put that label on products which are not made in our country with US labor and materials.

I for one look for products made in the USA as I believe our standards are higher and I want our people to have jobs and a decent living. Too many of our 35-60 yr. olds are being caught in the "downsizing" of companies and our "middle class" is becoming poorer because of it.

The rich are getting richer and the middle class is getting poorer.

Even the "poor" have many of the benefits of health care, food stamp help, rent payment assistance etc.

It frightens me to see healthy,
intelligent, sometimes college educated,
men and women out-of-work when big business sends our work to foreign countries.

Let's start taking care of our own too!
