OVERVIEW OF THE DoD FAMILY CENTERS

The function of the Department of Defense's Family Centers is to assist commanding officers and installation commanders in addressing family issues and enhancing mission readiness. Towards this effort, Family Centers offer a diverse range of family support programs to single and married service members, DoD civilians, Reserve/National Guard, and their families. In addition, they coordinate and collaborate with other military agencies for community planning, prevention programs and initiatives, and service delivery. Family Centers also have responsibility to educate and advise commanders on family matters and community issues.

As a key component of the support system for military members and families, Family Centers assist individuals by either directing them to the appropriate military agency or by connecting them with the information and support provided by the Family Center. Family Centers as an agency provide a range of services including information and referral, education, counseling, and assistance. These services focus on various military and family life issues that include: relocation, financial management, employment assistance, deployment and family separations, crisis assistance, life skills education, parenting, and support for families who have family members with disabilities. In addition, Family Centers coordinate volunteer opportunities at an installation. Other services that may be housed at and offered by the Family Center include: transition assistance for members leaving the military and the prevention component of the family advocacy program, which oversees the prevention of child abuse and neglect and spouse abuse.

The activities of the Family Center are governed by DoD policy set forth in DoD Directive 1342.17, "Family Policy," December 30, 1988 and DoD Instruction 1342.22, "Family Centers," December 30, 1992. Each of the Services has also established regulations, instructions, standards, or orders. (Note: To obtain DoD Directives/Instructions and Service Regulations/Standards, contact either the Services directly or the Military Family Resource Center.) In addition, individual installations may have local orders that augment such policy. As a result, there can be variability in what and how services are conducted across installations. A brief overview of Family Center's role and activities in three areas -- community education, direct services, and leadership consultation -- is provided below.

Family Center refers to Army Community Service or ACS in the Army, Family Support Center or FSC in the Air Force, Fleet and Family Support Center or FFSC in the Navy, and Community Support Centers in the Marine Corps. This directory identifies the director or point of contact in each Family Center located at U.S. military installations worldwide.

Community education

The purposes of community education activities are to increase awareness of potential financial pitfalls, family violence, stresses, and other difficulties faced by families; plan, develop and promote activities that strengthen individuals' and families' skills; and provide information on the early warning signs of families in trouble (e.g., indicators of abuse and neglect).

Installation Family Centers work with agencies on and off an installation to educate the community in a variety of ways that include: regular briefings to different audiences (such as service members, families, commanders, military agencies, and civilian agencies), classes, ongoing consultation to command, and dissemination of informational brochures.

Family Centers are also involved in targeted prevention efforts. Targeted prevention efforts comprise intensified support to special population groups such as families facing a deployment (which is a time of high stress), families in financial trouble, and young families new to the military. To address the needs of these families, special programs are offered. For example, to address the risks of abuse associated with deployment, Family Center staff work with Family Advocacy Program staff to provide special briefings and assistance to service members and families before units deploy and upon return.

Direct services

Family Centers offer and sponsor a range of direct services designed to assist families in handling aspects of the military life, such as deployment, relocation, and transition, and to address the needs of the community. Areas in which direct assistance is provided include: employment assistance, financial management, relocation assistance, and transition assistance. These services are delivered through one-on-one counseling, classes, and briefings. However, in an effort to ensure the range of services needed is available, Family Centers are increasingly working with other military and civilian agencies to coordinate the delivery of services.

Leadership consultation

In the role as advisor to command, Family Center staff work closely with commanding officers at all levels to keep them informed on issues of concern and to assist command staff in addressing family issues. To support these efforts, Family Center staff establish relationships with civilian agencies in order to remain abreast of community resources and model programs/initiatives and to coordinate services on behalf of families or military units.

PURPOSE OF DIRECTORY

Given changes in the military missions and Federal government, the Department of Defense has shifted the focus of military Family Centers and thus its management systems and service delivery strategies. The role of Family Centers has shifted from a “hold your hand” perspective to developing the skills and expanding the knowledge that enables military members and families to be “self-sufficient.” As a consequence, Family Centers are providing information and support in the following ways: addressing a wide array of topics, addressing multiple issues simultaneously to deal with interrelated issues, disseminating information in diverse ways which includes greater outreach, and targeting at-risk groups. In addition, Family Centers are also educating and assisting commanders in their efforts to address the issues of military members and their families. To succeed in these efforts, Family Centers (and the various family support program staff working within this military agency) are striving to:

- Collect information that will aid planning and program delivery efforts
- Become familiar with research, model programs and best practices to provide more effective services
- Establish networks and build and maintain partnerships for multiple purposes that include:
  - creating community-wide actions to address community needs and problems
  - maximizing resources available and reducing duplication of services
  - enhancing outreach efforts to the large percentage of military families living off base as well as at-risk groups.

Understanding how Family Centers work with others

Family Center staff work with other military agencies and other military installations to plan and coordinate prevention efforts on financial indebtedness, child and spouse abuse, and other military community concerns. Family Centers work with civilian agencies to educate the community on military lifestyle and military family issues, to coordinate prevention efforts and service delivery, and to enhance staff development activities. For a more detailed description of these efforts, see the section entitled Overview of the DoD Family Centers.

How to use the directory

This listing is provided to aid efforts in sharing information as well as coordinating and collaborating on prevention efforts and services at military installations and in local communities. The directory provides the contacts and addresses for Family Centers worldwide. This directory is for the use of both the military and civilian communities.

This directory has been prepared and provided to you courtesy of the Military Family Resource Center (MFRC). To update the directory for the 2000 edition, MFRC obtained copies of current directories available from the Military Services and revised information based on MFRC mailings to Family Centers in the past year. With your help, MFRC can update this directory on an ongoing basis. You are encouraged to notify the MFRC of any name, address, telephone, or email address changes.
