

Sirs,
RE: your workshop on spyware and adware

I have come across a problem that is neither spyware or adware but is an application that is a bit of both but is also an application.

It is called NewDotNet (sometimes NDOTNET) and others. But what it does is exactly what you defined as spyware/adware.

It comes through emails, it becomes an application that escapes removal by locking up the window and everything it does is archived. No matter what is done, and I have used McAfee and Symantec and other things to get rid of it. I got it from Eanthology.com and when I write to say remove it - no answer. Now it has gotten a porn generator going and I get 30 to 50 messages a day from different porn sites. I delete them promptly but it is irritating as hell.

Can something be done about this problem. Both Symantec and several other spyware removers have special instructions for this problem but the problem is the spyware changes itself rapidly probably with a little boost of AI.

Thanks
