It's unreal that I have to run a program several times daily to clear my computer of spyware. The first time I ran the one I have now it detected 80 entries in my registry that were spyware... and I was wondering why my computer was running so slow. The difference after removing them was quite noticeable. I don't know why anyone should think they have the right to track where I go on the internet. That's my business and the junk email generated by their fishing expeditions isn't welcomed any more than the spyware is.
