BRAVO! It's about time something like this is being looked at. For far too long people have had really no voice when it comes to what is being reported or viewed on credit reports, yet our lives are so greatly impacted by this information. To date, I have several negative strikes on my credit report that are incorrect. Even after disputing them, they still remain, because it seems the reporting agencies tend to believe the companies that file the false information rather than believe the individual.

I hope this helps. The whole credit reporting system needs to be revamped. Hopefully, this is a step in the right direction.
