Gentlemen:

I operate a cottage industry from my home and am your typical small family business. For those of who are self-employed, there are never enough hours in the day, yet I regularly have to devote an inordinate amount of time in an effort to insure the safety of my the lifeblood of my business--my databases and computer system. Regularly, some variation on a new spyware has entered my system, robbing me of productive time required to purge and build further layers of protection against this insidious menace.

I urge you to take steps to eliminate these threats to the stability of small business!

Sincerely,
Ron Patton
