Spyware and adware have been installed on my computer without my approval or knowledge, making them a worse problem than spam, some of which can be filtered out and all of which can be erased without any hassles. The proliferation of spyware has curtailed my use of the web, crashed my system, and left me with a regular chore of checking my computer for intrusions to my privacy. Further, I have to run multiple programs, and update those regularly, as the pirates not only invade my computer, but constantly change their methods to attempt to escape detection.

Also, please consider that these people have to have my permission to call me, but they can use the same phone lines to install unwanted software in my computer without my knowledge. Perhaps the FCC should work with you to stop this problem.
