Look no further, I may have a solution for you. Are you guys familiar with Yahoo or MSN Instant Messenger? Knowtist when someone adds you to their messenger list, it asks you for permission to accept them? How about every email that comes to your email, it asks you for permission to accept it. If you say yes, it will go in your inbox, and you can open it, if you say no, it will be deleted. Sort of if someone adds you, and you deny them, it won't put your name in their messenger. I truly believe in my heart that this is the safest way to remove email before it goes in your inbox. The rest will go in the bulk mail. I hope you could respond and tell me what you think.
