The Rural Information Center (RIC) is a joint project of the USDA Cooperative State Research, Education & Extension Service and the National Agricultural Library (NAL). RIC provides information and referral services to local government officials, community organizations, health professionals and organizations, cooperatives, libraries, businesses, and rural citizens working to maintain the vitality of America's rural areas. The Center combines the technical, subject-matter expertise of Extension's nationwide educational network with the information specialists and resources of the world's foremost agricultural library.

The Office of Rural Health Policy in the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) and the NAL jointly created a Rural Information Center Health Service (RICHS) as part of the RIC. RICHS collects and disseminates information on rural health issues, research findings related to rural health, and innovative approaches to the delivery of rural health care services.

SERVICES:

Provide customized information products to specific inquiries including assistance in economic revitalization issues; local government planning projects; rural health issues; funding sources; and other related issues for the purpose of monitoring the quality of rural life.

Process a broad array of general and funding information requests on such topics as:

- ! Successful strategies, models, and case studies of community development projects
- ! Small business attraction, retention, and expansion
- ! Tourism promotion and development
- ! Recycling programs
- ! Community water quality
- ! Technology transfer to rural areas
- ! Closures, restructuring and diversification of rural hospital and clinics
- ! Agricultural health and safety
- ! Health programs, services, personnel issues
- ! State initiatives concerning rural health delivery issues

Refer users to organizations or experts in the field who can provide additional information.

Perform brief database searches of requested topics on a complimentary basis.

Furnish bibliographies and Rural Information Center Publication Series titles.

Identify current USDA and DHHS research and Cooperative Extension Systems programs.

Historic Preservation Resources

INTRODUCTION

Historic preservation is saving our past, our cultural heritage, and our historic environments. It is concerned with conservation, maintenance, protection, and repair, and, at times, the replication of our built and human environment.

Historic preservation includes the architectural aspects of our heritage from buildings and other structures to historic sites and entire communities, heritage districts, and heritage corridors. Historic canals, farms, haciendas, landscapes, industries, lighthouses, pueblos, railroads, rivers, scenic views, and archaeological ruins are all part of our cultural heritage. Historic preservation considers our heirloom craftsmanship, building materials, tools, and construction methods. The description and documentation of all aspects of our heritage and history are a vital part of historic preservation. In addition to protecting and saving our heritage, historic preservation fosters an appreciation of our diverse cultural heritage.

To many, the economic benefits of historic preservation may be the most important. Historic preservation provides an avenue to enrich and revitalize our lives and communities. It creates jobs, revitalizes downtown areas, stimulates businesses, and ultimately, makes communities more vital. Historic preservation offers tax incentives, funding possibilities, motivation for community involvement, and fosters community spirit. Historic preservation enables communities to become economically viable and livable.

Access to useful and current information on all aspects of historic preservation is essential for the success of historic preservation initiatives. This resources bibliography is designed as a working tool for researching, planning, and organizing. The various sections provide a sampling of available materials and resources.

FEDERAL RESOURCES

Among the federal resource that provide assistance in historic preservation, the National Park Service within the Department of the Interior and the National Trust for Historic Preservation, chartered by the federal government are primary resources. These two organizations offer a wealth of expertise and services, including grant and funding assistance, publications, training, and technical assistance. To learn more about any of their services or about other federal services, check with their offices, the state historic preservation offices, historic preservation associations, libraries, or local, state, or regional historic societies.

National Park Service

Department of the Interior

For decades, the National Park Service has led federal efforts to preserve this country's cultural heritage by providing a variety of historic preservation services through their various cultural resource programs. Some of the divisions of the National Park Service that provide assistance are: Preservation Assistance, Interagency Resources, the History Program, the Historic American Buildings/Historic American Engineering Record, and the Archaeological Assistance Program. The National Park Service sets the standards for all aspects of preservation from research to documentation to repair work. Their other services include: developing technical preservation techniques, publishing and distributing technical information about historic preservation, providing training and workshops on all facets of historic preservation from planning to preservation methods, administering the Preservation Tax Incentives program, monitoring the status of the National Historic Landmarks, managing the Historic Preservation Fund grants-in-aid program, and managing all aspects of the National Register of Historic Places.

The National Park Service offers many kinds of publications and materials from one-page fliers to instructive pamphlets and lengthy books, guides, and bibliographies. These publications can be located in many places including libraries, associations, or from the National Park Service itself. Some of these publications are noted in this bibliography.

Many National Park Service Publications are listed in the Catalog of Historic Preservation Resources. The catalog is free. Please note that the Catalog is not a complete listing of National Park Service Publications.
