

News RELEASE

American Psychiatric Association, 1000 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 1825, Arlington, VA 22209

For Information Contact:

Hillarie Fogel 703-907-8536

hfogel@psych.org

For Immediate Release

June 11, 2003

Release No. 03-27

Traveling with Children – Tips for Parents

By David Fassler, M.D.

Trustee at Large, American Psychiatric Association

Summer is almost here and many families will be traveling to a variety of vacation destinations. Many children enjoy traveling. It is an opportunity to see new places, meet new people and have new experiences. However, travel can also be anxiety provoking for some children. Being in large crowds, flying, sleeping in a strange bed, or eating unfamiliar foods can cause concern for some children.

The following suggestions may help parents minimize a child's anxiety when traveling:

- If your child is old enough, let him or her help plan your trip. Let them learn about where you're going and how you're going to get there.
- Leave plenty of time. Nothing is more stressful for parents or children than rushing to catch a plane or trying to reach a destination on time.
- Keep children occupied, especially on car or plane trips. Bring food, books, and games.
- Try to establish a relatively regular routine, even when traveling. Children are reassured by predictability.
- Let your child bring something familiar from home. It may be a stuffed animal, blanket, or a favorite toy. Encourage kids to bring pictures of friends, family, and pets.
- Plan plenty of bathroom and snack breaks. Try to keep kids comfortable and well fed.
- If traveling for an extended period, help kids keep in contact with friends back home. Let them call, send letters, postcards, or email to friends.
- Don't force kids to tolerate extended "adult activities" like long museum visits, formal dinners, or plays in languages they don't understand. Plan child oriented activities -- children's museums, parks, zoos, and toy stores.

-more-

Most children like to travel and welcome the opportunity to spend time with one or both parents. Despite the excitement, a certain degree of anxiety about being away from home is common. However, some children experience extreme anxiety that makes it difficult, if not impossible, for them to travel. They may be anxious about flying or worried about getting lost. They may be uncomfortable sleeping in an unfamiliar place. If such worries persist, or a child experiences episodes of intense anxiety or panic attacks while traveling, parents should talk to the child's pediatrician or family doctor, who can provide a referral to a trained and qualified mental health professional.

Dr. Fassler is a board certified child and adolescent psychiatrist practicing in Burlington, Vermont. He is a Clinical Associate Professor in the Department of Psychiatry, University of Vermont College of Medicine. Dr. Fassler is also a Trustee of the American Psychiatric Association.

The American Psychiatric Association is a national medical specialty society, founded in 1844, whose 35,000 physician members specialize in the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of mental illnesses including substance use disorders. For more information, visit the APA Web site at www.psych.org.

###